To grasp intelligently the conditions which have brought the most extensive, the most devastating, the most costly war that human history has had to record, the shock of which has shaken the economic fabric of the world, it is necessary at the very outset to discriminate carefully between those events which became the direct provocative cause of the conflict, which merely served to precipitate it, and those more fundamental, basic conditions which for a long time have been smoldering ominously, latent with potential action, in the depths of the volcano which has now burst into eruption.

The immediate or precipitating cause of the embroilment of the great Powers of Europe may be stated briefly as follows:-

A Servian, who doubtless regarded himself as a patriotic regicide, assassinated the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne, and the Archduke's consort, the Duchess of Hohenburg, while the royal pair were driving through the streets of Sarajevo, the capital city of Bosnia, a province which some years ago had been annexed to the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The Austro-Hungarian Government held that the assassination was the direct result of a hostile propaganda born and nurtured by the members of Servian secret societies—a propaganda which the Servian Government tolerated, even if it did not connive at its machinations. Austria charged that the very conspiracy which had resulted in the death of the heir apparent had been organized and effected by accredited chiefs of the Servian frontier service.

These charges and sundry demands of a drastic nature were embodied in an ultimatum which the Austro-Hungarian Government sent to Servia. The assassination occurred on June 28,1914. The ultimatum was delivered three weeks later. on July 23, 1914.

Commenting upon this State document on the day following, Sir Edward Grey, Foreign Secretary for Great Britain, said:— "The murder of the Archduke and some of the circumstances respecting Servia quoted in the note aroused sympathy with Austria, as was but natural, but at the same time I had never before seen one State address to another independent State a document of so formidable a character. Demand No. 5 would be hardly consistent with the maintenance of Servia's independent sovereignty if it were to mean, as it seemed that it might, that Austria-Hungary was to be invested with a right to appoint officials who would have authority within the frontiers of Servia."

Demand No. 5, to which Sir Edward specifically referred, called upon Servia—"To accept the collaboration in Servia of representatives of the Austro-Hungarian Government in the suppression of the subversive movement directed against the territorial integrity of the Monarchy."

Austria's ultimatum provided that Servia must yield upon all points specified within a period of forty-eight hours. Servia replied, agreeing substantially to nearly all the terms of the ultimatum, but demurring to others, including the demand contained in Article 5. These she offered to submit to the arbitrament of the Hague Peace Tribunal. Servia at the same time appealed for protection and support to the Russian Government, which for racial reasons, as well as for weighty considerations of self interest, had long stood as a guardian Power against aggressions threatening the autonomy of the Balkan States.

Austria-Hungary's answer at the expiration of the time limit was a declaration of war against Servia, and Austria's forces speedily began a bombardment of Belgrade, the Servian capital. Russia thereupon began the mobilization of her vast army. The German Emperor called upon the Czar to discontinue his warlike preparations and made official inquiries of the French Republic as to what would be the attitude of France, an ally of Russia under the bond of the Triple Entente, in the event of war between Germany and Russia.

GERMANY'S WAR DECLARATIONS.

The responses of France not being satisfactory to the Kaiser, Germany, on August 1, declared war upon both Russia and France. The next day the troops of the Kaiser were overrunning the independent principality of Luxemburg, lying between the German and French frontiers and thus affording a gateway into France. German Armies also speedily invaded Belgium as a highway across to the French border, the German Emperor offering to King Albert, of Belgium, certain guarantees on condition that Belgium would permit without opposition the free passage of the German Armies through his terri-

Belgium's neutrality had been guaranteed for years by treaty compact, to which Germany, France and Great Britain alike were signatory. Belgium, in her hour of need, appealed to Great Britain for protection against invasion, citing the terms of the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of her domains, and scorning the proffered guarantees of the Kaiser offered as the price of her acquiescence in his plans for penetrating France by the speediest route. Two days later Belgium arrayed itself, with France and Russia, against Germany, and Belgian troops were fighting the advance of the German Armies toward the French borders.

Great Britain did not hesitate long, though German statecraft exhausted every diplomatic expedient to persuade England to hold aloof from the impending conflict. The British Government took the position that England was bound to stand beside Russia and France, her allies in the Triple Entente, but that she was especially bound by solemn treaty obligation to defend the neutrality and inviolability of Belgium against hostile invasion. British statesmen asserted that to hold aloof in such conditions would be not alone to jeopardize England's most vital interests, but would be to place an everlasting stigma upon her fair name.

The German Chancellor frankly admitted that in passing her troops through Belgian territory on their way to French soil, Germany was acting in violation of the treaty guaranteeing Belgian neutrality. The German contention was epitomized in the saying that "necessity knows no law," and in that other axiomatic proverb that "self preservation is the first law of nature"—and also of nations. The German Government held that Russia had been the aggressor, that France was only too willing, with the aid of such a powerful ally, to seize the occasion to attempt to retrieve her ill fortunes of 1870 and to regain the lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine.

Germany's contention has been that she did not desire war with any Power, that for thirty years the Kaiser has been the foremost conservator of the peace of Europe and that Germany's chief aim has been the peaceful development of the arts and sciences, in which she excels, and the expansion of her splendid resources in industry and commerce; that Germany found herself assailed upon both her eastern and western borders by powerful enemies and that, in that emergency, she was compelled to take such steps as were most expedient for the defence of her own national life.

Among those who excuse the German advance through Belgium it is also a popular declaration that "if Germany had hesitated to utilize that avenue, the French would not have refrained from doing so." This, being a purely hypothetical assumption, may be accepted or dismissed at its precise value in the estimation and judgment of the individual reader.

Whatever may be the merit of these disputations, the British Government refused to assume a neutral attitude. Three days after Germany's declaration of war, Britain cast in her lot with France, Russia and little Belgium against Germany. Later, through England's alliance with Japan, under the terms of which the Mikado was pledged to the defence of Britain's possessions in the Far East, the Japanese Empire also declared war against Germany and began military operations against German interests in China. Within more recent months hostilities have developed between the British and the German colonists in South Africa, some of the Boers, who had been conquered by England, revolting against their new allegiance.

Little Montenegro, small geographically, but with a seasoned army of fighting mountaineers, actuated by motives of mutual self interest, declared for her neighbor and former ally, Servia, thus tossing into the scale one more fighting factor against the German military establishment.

Here, then, was presented the astounding spectacle of a world plunged into sudden war-spectacle of a world plunged into sudden warfare upon no less than three continents, of Europe's greatest nations pitting against each other millions of trained soldiers armed with the most deadly of modern weapons for the annihilation of human life and the wholesale destruction of property. And to the eye of the superficial student of events it might appear that all this cataclysm of horror piled upon horror had come about through the mad act of an irresponsible assassin.

SOME UNDERLYING CAUSES.

Such a conclusion would be unwarranted. Europe had not gone to war to avenge a murdered Archduke. The assassination of the heir to the throne of the Dual Monarchy was merely the spark which lighted the fuse to the mine already heavily charged. Nor is it a fair assumption that the millions of men now arrayed against each other in deadly combat had been simply herded together into the strife, "like dumb, driven cattle," at the mandate of their kings, cabinets or emperors. The spontaneity with which France rushed to arms, abandoning the pursuits of peace to her women, her old men and her boys; the enthusiasm with which the German hosts rallied around their Kaiser at the first call to arms, with the battle cry on their lips, "Deutschland uber Alles!"; the slower, but grim and steady, massing of Britain's strength—all these phenomena disprove the theory that this is merely a war of rival rulers arbitrarily driving their hapless and helpless subjects to the cannon's mouth.

This war is not, in the opinion of well informed students of history, the product of any one man, however highly born under the aegis of the "divine rights of kings." Is it not the making of any group of men, however potential they may have been in imperialistic counsels. It is not primarily a war of cabinets, nor of chancelleries; of hostile dynasties, nor of rival aspirants for military glory. It is a war of the peoples, a war the tap root of which will be found, if the seeker go deep enough, in broadly conflicting policies and antagonistic national interests. The unanimity with which the rank and file of the common people in the countries most directly involved have rushed to the colors is the best proot that they understand, in some measure, at least, that this is a war fraught with issues in the outcome of which they are vitally interested.

For years a cardinal doctrine of socialism has been the denunciation of warfare. Its advocates have preached the doctrines of internationalism and of world peace. In the German Empire the socialists had grown so powerful that their representation is today the strongest single partisan factor numerically in the Imperial Reichstag. Yet, despite their professed abhorrence of war and all its innumerable train of evils, the German socialists to a man had flocked to the colors and are fighting, as they believe, for the preservation and the expansion of the greatness of the Fatherland. And the same may be said essentially of the socialists of France, Austria, Italy and England.

However glibly statesmen and diplomatists may disavow ambition for territorial aggrandizement, this is a war, at bottom, for territorial, commercial, industrial expansion; for the winning and development of colonies into which the overpopulated countries of Europe may divert their surplus population; colonies whereby these peoples may expand their domestic and foreign markets, to which they may ship their products and manufactures and from which, in turn, they may draw added resources for the support of an ever increasing population at home.

So far as concerns Germany and Austria, at least, thoughtful men are disposed to concede that this is a fight not only for the preservation of the majesty of Imperial Germany, but for what the German Emperor himself has called "a place in the sun."

A WAR OF ALLIANCES.

But this is also a war of alliances. In Europe, Germany and Austria-Hungary stood confronting Russia, France and England. The alignment of these two great alliances is a perfectly natural one, though that of Liberal England and Republican France with Autocratic Russia is thought frequently to be an unnatural bond. By references to historical facts it will be the task of the writer further on to sketch in greater detail just what have been the controlling influences, political, commercial and military, which have determined the partnerships of these two great rival alignments of Powers. seemingly incongruous alliance between Russia, England and France, however, is not so surprising as it might appear, for reasons which may be stated broadly thus:-

The present European war, unlike smaller wars and diplomatic struggles that have preceded it, is not primarily a conflict between political ideals, between, democracy and feudalism, or, as Napoleon expressed it, "Republican against Cossack." It is rather a conflict waged by those peoples who are increasing so rapidly that they must have greater territory against those who possess already such territory as they need.

Of the three Powers constituting the Triple Entente, Russia is probably the only one which covets additional territory. And in the case of Russia this is not so much because she requires additional expansion to accommodate her surplus population, nor because she desires better foreign markets, as because she needs an unhampered outlet into warm seas, good harbors wherein her carrying trade will not be blocked by ice six or seven months of the year.

Her allies, England and France, on the other hand, already enjoy that free access to the ocean which Russia desires. Both England and France achieved their national unity at the dawn of modern history, while central Europe—Germany, Austria and Italy—were yet a conglomeration of petty states and principalities. Thus England and France were enabled to explore, to colonize, to reach out and appropriate to themselves the choice spots of the colonial world. They possess already enough room for their increasing population and for their expanding commerce. In the main, therefore, it may be said that France and Great Britain are fighting to retain their grasp upon what they have.

With the Powers of the Triple Alliance—Germany, Austria and Italy—the situation is different. These are the nations which have achieved their national unity only within the memories of men yet living; since the time of Bismarck and Victor Emmanuel. These are the newer Powers, who found when they came to look about for fertile fields of colonial expansion that those parts of the earth most suitable as habitations for white men and most productive as markets for industrial and commercial expansion had been already occupied by their older rivals.

With this primary line of cleavage made clear between the two great alignments now in hostile array, it becomes necessary to study in somewhat more detail the status of each of the several Powers composing the Triple Entente and the Triple Alliance up to the period when those great international bonds between them were cemented. Though the Triple Alliance in its formation antedated the Triple Entente, it appears expedient to consider first the Powers composing the Triple Entente.

POWERS OF THE TRIPLE ENTENTE

Whatever may be said of the fighting qualities of France's reorganized army, or of the crushing effect of the millions of men whom the Czar of Russia can command, the most formidable foe which Germany and Austria have to face is the British Empire.

Within the last three hundred years the English have built up by exploration, colonization and conquest the largest empire in the history of the world. In turn they have defeated Spain, Holland and France, the only Powers which have dared to dispute with them the supremacy of the seas. In the eighteenth century they won from France her colony of Canada, in North America, and the undisputed right to extend their rule over India. During the Napoleonic wars they conquered the Cape of Good Hope from the Dutch and made good their claims to Australia and New Zealand.

Since then they have pushed westward across upper North America to the Pacific, have subdued Hindustan and ringed it about with buffer states and have established in the Union of South Africa one of the most flourishing communities in the world.

England's empire is not only the largest, but is also perhaps the most economically self sufficient empire on earth today. The British Isles, the source of the race and still the home of a thriving and rapidly increasing population, constitute the industrial, commercial and economic centre of the Empire. The self-governing dominions over seas-Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, all of them located in the temperate zones-afford almost unlimited fields for the expansion of the surplus population, and furnish the wheat, the wool, the gold and other raw materials which go to feed the English at home and to keep their mill wheels turning. They, moreover, together with India. Egypt and other outlying possessions, furnish the mother country with a constant market for her industrial products.

It is obvious, and to no one more than to the English themselves, that this economic self-sufficiency of their Empire is absolutely dependent upon their potential control of the high seas. With that fact ever in mind, they have built not only the greatest merchant marine in the world and the most powerful fleet of war ships with which to protect and defend it, but they have knit their far-flung Empire together by seizing and in most cases fortifying the strategic points along every trade route and waterway.

If, as Napoleon said, "Antwerp is a pistol pointed at the heart of England," it is equally true that the British Isles command the mouth of the Scheldt, and with it that of the Rhine, the Elbe and the Danish Sund itself. Gibraltar, Malta, Cyprus, Egypt, which commands the Suez Canal; Aden at the other end of the Red Sea, India and Ceylon, the settlements on the Strait of Malacca, Australia and British New Guinea, on either side of Torres Strait; the Fiji and other islands in the South Pacific, and the Falkland Islands commanding the Strait of Magellan—these form that vaunted "thin red line which girdles the globe."

THE FRENCH DOMAINS.

France, England's principal ally in the western theatre of war, has had to bear the brunt of the land fighting, numerically speaking, in that quarter down to the present time. The empire of France is the third which her people have constructed. After having lost all of their North American and East Indian possessions to the English and the whole of the European em pire which the first Napoleon had won for them, they have conquered and developed in northern Africa, since 1830, an empire which in extent, at least, is second only to those of England and

Few persons in this country realize the vast size of this comparatively new French domain. From Cape Verde eastward to the Anglo-Egyptian Soudan is as far as from Salt Lake City to New York, and from the Algerian seaboard to the Belgian Kongo is further than from San Francisco to Chicago. This vast territory, together with the island of Madagascar in the Indian Ocean, which is larger than France itself, and possessions in Indo-China, afford the people ample room for the expansion of a population which, compared with that of Germany, is increasing, but at a much slower rate.

France covets only the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, wrested from her in 1871, and these not so much to accommodate an increasing population, or even because a considerable proportion of their inhabitants remain essentially French, but rather to wipe out the rankling stigma of defeat.

RUSSIA'S BALKED AMBITIONS.

The only Power of the three, comprising the Triple Entente, then, which has a constructive program, is Russia. When Peter the Great as-cended the throne of Russia, in 1696, that country had only one outlet to the sea, the port of Archangel, on the White Sea, which was frozen in during most of the year. Gustavus Adolphus and his successors had made of the Baltic a Swedish lake. Poland, then the great Slav Power of central Europe, barred the way to the west, while the Turks and Tartars occupied all the country north of the Black Sea and the Caucasus. Since then Russia's foreign policy has been dominated by the desire for an outlet to the sea.

Peter beat back the Swedes to their own peninsula and founded St. Petersburg, on the Gulf of Finland, only to find, to his chagrin, that he had not yet won for Russia the access to warm waters which he desired she should have. By waters which he deshed she should have. By a succession of wars during the eighteenth century, his successors subdued and assimilated the Tartars and, bit by bit, reduced the Turkish power until, in 1809, after Russia had received the lion's share of Poland, partitioned among Austria, Prussia and herself, she had attained substantially the boundaries she has today.

With the close of the Napoleonic wars, in 1815, two new motives began to act and interact with this dominant desire for a seaport. The Czar is not only the Emperor of all the Russias, but he is at the same time the head of the Greek Orthodox Church, in which capacity he bears a similar relation to the Greek Christians in the Balkans and elsewhere outside his own territorial domains to that which the Sultan, at Constantinople, bears to the Mohammedans outside of The French Revolution, moreover, Turkey. had propagated to the most remote corners of the continent the doctrine of nationality, which taught that the peoples of one race should be under one government. Most of the peoples living in the Balkans, then subject to Turkey, who since then have formed the Balkan States, are Greek Christians and of the Slav race. In accord with these close ties of race and religion, therefore, and actuated by a desire to push still further south-westward, Russia for the last hundred years has insisted upon her right to act as the guardian for these peoples.

When, however, in 1853, Russia renewed her hostilities against the Turks, she found herself confronted by an alliance between England and France, who feared her approach to the Mediterranean and therefore came to the Sultan's support. In the Crimean War, which ensued, Russia was defeated and was obliged to dismantle her fortresses and her fleet upon the Black Sea. By the Peace of Paris, England, France and Austria joined in guaranteeing the integrity of the Ottoman Empire.

But, in 1877, after France had been beaten by Germany, public opinion in England was so shocked by the atrocity with which the Porte had attempted to suppress insurrection in Bosnia, Herzegovina and Bulgaria that these Powers held aloof while a Russian Army marched to within sight of the minarets of Constantinople. By the terms of the treaty of San Stefano, which closed the war, Turkey recognized the independence of Roumania, Servia and Montenegro. Bulgaria was made a self-governing State tributary to the Sultan, with almost as extensive a territory as it has today.

CONGRESS OF BERLIN.

Then the western Powers saw fit again to interfere. At the Congress of Berlin, in 1878, the treaty was revised. The greater Bulgaria was shorn of much of its territory and Macedonia was restored to the Turk. What is now Bulgaria was divided into two autonomous States, Eastern Roumelia and Bulgaria proper, on either side of the Balkan Mountains, both to remain nominally Turkish. The independence of Roumania, Servia and Montenegro was reaffirmed, but Roumania was forced to cede to Russia, Bessarabia, a district inhabited by her own people, and to take the Dobrudscha, south of the Danube, as compensation.

The stipulation of this treaty which was fraught with the most momentous consequences was that one which provided that Austria should thenceforth administer the revolted provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and should occupy with military forces the Sanjak of Novibazar, a narrow strip of the Sultan's territory lying between the two new Slav States of Servia and Montenegro. Thenceforth Austria-Hungary became the rival of Russia for influence in the Balkans.

Convinced by this latest reverse that the other European Powers would not consent to a further extension of her own territory toward the Bosphorus, Russia since 1878 has contented herself with strengthening the power of the smaller States of her race in the Balkans.

She has made, however, one more attempt to acquire her much coveted open port. After building the Trans-Siberian Railroad across the vast breadth of her Asiatic empire, she occupied Manchuria and for a time it seemed that in Port Arthur she had realized her hopes. How Japan, feeling her national existence to be at stake, challenged the Russian advance; how, in 1904, she finally resorted to war, destroyed Russia's fleet, captured Port Arthur and defeated the Czar's Army at Mukden are recent history, well within the memories of most readers.

Flung back upon her steppes and extensive plains, which still lack an outlet to the ocean, Russia stands substantially in the position she occupied before the Crimean War. She has remained the protector of the new Slav States in the Balkans and has fondly kept alive the dream that some day she may absorb them, and so, finally reach the warm waters of the Adriatic and the Aegean.

POWERS IN TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

Having thus broadly sketched the history and ambitions of the Powers of the Triple Entente, let us consider their opponents of the other combination—the Triple Alliance. After the European Powers finally had disposed of Napoleon, in 1815, and had rearranged the map of Europe to suit themselves, the territory of central Europe which is now held by the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires and also that which now constitutes the Kingdom of Italy was divided among no less than forty-six independent States.

Germany, as we now have it, included at that time five kingdoms and a collection of lesser States of various sizes and denominations, free cities, duchies, grand duchies, margravates and electorates—a heterogeneous hotch-potch relic of feudal times.

Italy was divided among seven independent States and was, as the diplomatists of that day said, "merely a geographical expression." The strongest individual State was Austria which, from her position in the centre of the group, controlled the destinies of the South-German States; held the Magyars of Hungary and the Bohemians and other Slavic races in subjection and also controlled Lombardy and Venetia, in north Italy. Austria's own interests against the unification of either Germany or Italy, the consummation of which she succeeded in frustrating until after the middle of the nineteenth century.

It was this influence of Austria and the deterrent effect it had had upon every attempt to achieve German unity down to this time which led Bismarck, the great Chancellor of Prussia, to exclaim:—"Not by speeches and majority votes are the questions of the day decided, but by blood and iron," a phrase which has become famous as a supposed embodiment of the Bismarck military policy.

In pursuance of that policy, in 1866, the great Prussian Chancellor brought about a war between Prussia and Austria. After the complete prostration of her military power at Koniggratz, Austria was forced to withdraw from Germany. Thus freed of the hampering influence of the Hapsburg monarchy, Bismarck formed a confederation of the South-German States, whose entire strength, combined with that of Prussia and the North-German States, he was able four and the North-German States, he was able four years later to hurl against France. On January 18, 1871 he had the satisfaction of seeing his sovereign, William I, grandfather of the present Kaiser, proclaimed German Emperor, in the palace of Louis XIV, at Versailles.

GROWTH OF GERMANY.

The forty-four years since 1871 have been for Germany a period of industrial and commercial expansion almost unparalleled in the history of any people. Under the protective tariff system, to which she has adhered since 1879, her industries have gained such impetus that she had become the third greatest manufacturing country in the world.

When the present war broke out more than a million of her people were employed in the textile industries alone. Another million were employed in the production of iron ware, machinery and scientific instruments. More than half a million were engaged in the manufacture of wooden ware, while hundreds of thousands of others were occupied in the production of glass, porcelain, earthenware, silk and in the beet sugar industry. German commerce likewise had grown apace. In 1908 the iron and finished iron goods exported were valued at more than $18,000,000. out the exclusive markets enjoyed by his French and English competitors, the German merchant, by that same thoroughgoing efficiency which characterizes every aspect of the national life, has succeeded in more than holding his own in South America and in some cases, beating them in their own markets. To accommodate this growing foreign trade Germany had built up a merchant marine which ranked second only to that of England. Before the war more than five thousand ships were flying the German flag, which could be seen in practically every port.

which could be seen in practically every port. On an area no larger than that of France, Germany is today supporting a population of nearly 65,000,000, as against the 39,000,000 of her neighbor. This population has been increasing at a rate of more than half a million every year. To support these increasing numbers of people Germany must have colonies into which they may expand, or else she must have enlarged markets, so that all may have employment at home. To allow their surplus population to emigrate is, so Germans think, only to strengthen their rivals. Therefore, as Roland G. Usher, in his "Pan-Germanism" points out: "To ask a German whether the expansion of Germany is desirable is merely to ask him whether he believes it desirable from any point of view for the nation to survive."

With this crucial thought of Germany's imperative necessity for expansion fixed carefully in mind, let us consider the status of Italy and Austria-Hungary, her partners in the Triple

UNIFICATION OF ITALY.

While Bismarck, William I and Von Moltke were expelling the Austrians from Germany, Cavour and his king, Victor Emmanuel, of Sardinia and Piedmont, together with the patriot Garibaldi, were busy achieving a similar result in Italy. Unlike Bismarck, however, Cavour by wily diplomacy persuaded the French Emperor, Napoleon III, to help him, and it was largely owing to the French victories at Solferino and Magenta that the Austrians were finally expelled from the peninsula.

This circumstance, together with the racial tie of Latin blood which binds her to France and the gratitude of the Italian people and of the House of Savoy toward England for the moral support that country gave to Italy's struggle for national unity, explain in some measure Italy's reluctance to enter the present conflict arrayed against her one-time friends, France and Britain.

Unlike Germany and Italy, Austria-Hungary has not achieved real national unity even yet. Nor is she likely to achieve it for generations to come, for, containing a mixed population of Germans, Italians, Hungarians, Roumanian and Slavic races, Austria-Hungary is, as she has been aptly termed, "The Whirlpool of Europe."

The two principal divisions of the Empire are

The two principal divisions of the Empire are Austria and Hungary; and, as its name implies, the Austrians, of Teutonic blood, who live in that part of the Empire adjacent to Germany, and the Hungarian Magyars, a race of Asiatic origin who occupy its centre, are the ruling elements in its government. But neither the Germany.

mans in Austria nor the Magyars in Hungary form a majority of the population. Around them on the borders of the Empire are the other races, each of them racially affiliated with peoples on the other side of the political boundaries, each of them discontented and ambitious either of gaining for themselves greater power in the central government by creating a multiplicity of capitals, like Vienna and Budapest, or of uniting with their foreign brethren.

Thus, the Italians in Trent and Trieste yearn for union with Italy, the Serbs in Bosnia and Herzegovina for union with Servia and Montenegro, and the Roumanians of eastern Hungary for union with the independent kingdom of their kinsfolk.

Because of her grave race problem at home, Austria-Hungary has not been able, even during the last fifty years, to devote any of her energies to colonial expansion. She alone of all the great Powers of Europe is without possessions abroad. Crowded out of Germany and Italy by defeat in war, the Hapsburg monarchy has turned since toward the south-east; and when, in 1878, at the Congress of Berlin, the Powers "invited" her to occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Sanjak of Novibazar, she conceived the idea of eventually extending that narrow strip of territory between Servia and Montenegro until she reached Saloniki on the Aegean.

GENESIS OF THE ALLIANCES.

The reason for the division of Europe into two great armed camps, aligned as they now stand and as they have stood for years before the present war, may be found to a large extent in the peace pacts which Bismarck made with Austria and France respectively. In 1866, although the more militant party opposed him, Bismarck refused to annex any portion of Austria proper. Five years later, however, he made what thoughtful men have considered, in the light of intervening events, a diplomatic blunder by taking Alsace-Lorraine from France. Having done so, he was compelled thereafter to adopt the policy of isolating France, to accomplish which he made proffers of friendship to his old enemy, Austria.

Bismarck's original plan was to form a triple alliance, or Dreikaiserbund, between Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia and for a time following the France-Prussian War it seemed that he was about to succeed. In 1875, however, he threatened France with another war and invasion. This so alarmed Russia that from that time onward she began to incline toward France. The clash between the interests of Russia and Austria in the Balkans finally undid Bismarck's plan. At the Congress of Berlin he was forced to make a choice between those two Powers and finally he cast into the Austrian side of the scale

the mighty weight of German favor.

Realizing that this decision had mortally offended Russia, Bismarck, in 1879, arrived at a closer understanding with Austria. The treaty signed October 7, 1879, provided that if either Germany or Austria were attacked by Russia, the two should be bound "to lend each other reciprocal aid with the whole of their military power and, subsequently, to conclude no peace except conjointly and in agreement.

Italy's motives for joining the Triple Alliance were intimately associated with her colonial ambitions in northern Africa. Directly across the Mediterranean, only a hundred miles from Sicily, is Tunis, a country whose European population was in 1881, and still is, largely Italian. country Italy had marked for her own. She was gravely offended when, in that year, the French, having thoroughly conquered Algeria and its hinterland, suddenly seized Tunis. Aggrieved at France and with an eye on Triopli, as a possible compensation for the loss of Tunis, Italy, in 1882, joined Germany and Austria, thus forming the Triple Alliance.

The text of the treaty of alliance has never been published, but it is generally understood to have been a purely defensive compact model-led after that between Germany and Austria, which it superseded. Italy, at least, has so averred in refraining from joining her treaty allies in active hostilities of the present war. FRENCH ISOLATION ENDED.

Having sketched those influences brought into harmony the Powers constituting the Triple Alliance, let us now note the evolution of the Triple Entente, that other great combination brought into being as a countercheck upon the first.

For twenty years after her crushing defeat by Germany, France remained, as Bismarck intended she should remain, almost diplomatically isolated. From the year 1871 onward, however, Russia, chagrined at the check which Germany and Austria had placed upon her ambitions to acquire better harbors, and France fearful of further aggressions at the hands of Germany, began to support each other. In 1891 considerations of mutual protection against the then powerful Triple Alliance, led France and Russia to forget their past wars, ignore their divergent political ideals, and form a counterbalancing Dual Alliance.

Perhaps an equally potent factor in the con-summation of this alliance may be found in the economic tie which had been formed between the two countries, for during the last quarter of a century French bankers and capitalists have invested millions of francs in the development of Russia's natural resources, in addition to financing the administration of her government and the prosecution of her wars.

It is clear therefore, that, despite the widely divergent political ideals between republican France and autocratic Russia, there were strong reasons of mutual interest for bringing them into the same camp.

From the Peace of Paris, which closed the Crimean war in 1858 until after the close of the century England maintained in European politics a position of "splendid isolation." For years she pursued a policy of supporting now one of the continental combinations and then the other and she did so usually with decisive effect. England's colonial interests in Asia and Africa conflicted with those of Russia and France. She had feared the encroachment of Russia upon India for generations of time and had fortified the passes of the Hindu Kush against her. Her statesmen had bolstered up the tottering fabric of the Turkish Empire as a buffer between Russia and the Mediterranean, because they feared Russia's approach toward Constantinople would threaten their cherished route to the East.

Furthermore, Britain's interests in Egypt and the Soudan, during the last two decades of the nineteenth century, so conflicted with those of France that no statesmen of that period could have predicted the formation of a Triple Entente between these three Powers which should effectively counterbalance and eventually outlast the integrity of the Triple Alliance.

The Entente Cordiale between England and France dates from 1898. In that year the French outposts, pushing eastward into the Soudan, came face to face one day with Kitchener's men. The situation was delicate, and for a time the two nations were on the verge of war. But they did not go to war, because each had a wholesome fear of the formidable and growing military and naval prowess of Germany.

The situation was as it has been felicitously described by William M. Fullerton, in his "Problems of Power." England and France were in the position of two men who, having rolled up their sleeves, are about to fight, but who, hearing a suppressed chuckle behind them, turn around to see the sardonic grin of their neighbor and so forget their own grievances. So England and France, although hereditary enemies and rivals in colonial expansion, recognizing that their most vital interests were one and the same, arrived at an understanding respecting their spheres of influence in Africa. Through the tactful offices of M. Delcasse and the late King Edward VII, of England, the bond was strengthened until, in 1904, the two nations signed a treaty agreeing to submit to arbitration all future differences which might arise between

Since then, although the integrity of the compact binding England, France and Russia has been menaced at times, as in 1905, when the Russian fleet fired on the British trawlers in the North Sea, the bond has grown steadily firmer. Since 1911, when England openly supported France in the Morocco controversy, while never a written pact, the Entente Cordiale, as it is called, has amounted practically to an alliance between the two.

Just how the Anglo-Russian entente was brought about finally is a secret which diplomacy has not yet revealed to history. Russia's defeat in the Far East probably did much to alleviate the fear of Englishmen for the integrity of their Asiatic holdings. This and their common bonds with France, together with the general fear of Germany's growing power on land and sea, brought England and Russia together. The resultant Triple Entente, unlike the Triple Alliance, was not a formal pact, but was somewhat of the nature of "a gentlemen's agreement," the purport or scope of which was not definitely known until Sir Edward Grey defined England's position just before the outbreak of war.

ALLIANCE WITH JAPAN.

In the present war Japan is fighting the battles of the Triple Entente in the Far East. The explanation of her position is to be found in the intervention of three of the European Powers—France, Russia and Germany—who, in 1895 dispossessed Japan of Port Arthur, an important part of the spoils of a successful war which the Mikado's Armies had waged against China. When, within two years thereafter Germany seized Kiauchau and Russia herself occupied Port Arthur, Japan felt that the solicitude which these Powers had manifested for the integrity of China and Korea had not been devoid of ulterior motives.

Japan, therefore, in 1902, formed a defensive alliance with England, whereby the two Powers agreed to support one another in the event that either should be attacked by more than one other Power. Having satisfactorily settled her old score with Russia as a result of the Russo-Japanese war in 1904, Japan, under the terms of her friendly treaty with England, has now entered into the present war against Germany.

STAKES IN THE WAR GAME.

Before taking up the story of the commercial and diplomatic struggles between the component parts of these opposing alliances and of the smaller wars which preceded the present conflict, we must sketch briefly the status and ambitions of those peoples who, by reason of their geographical position or their inferior strength, seem destined to become inevitably the stakes in this gigantic and desperate war game for world supremacy. Such countries include four small States—Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark and Portugal, together with their colonial possessions, the whole of the Mohammedan world and the Balkans.

Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark occupy strategic positions in northern Europe. Belgium is the natural gateway between Germany and France; the Netherlands controls the mouths of the Scheldt and the Rhine and Denmark holds the same position with relation to the Baltic that Turkey does to the Black Sea. Fully aware of the value of their relatively small territory in Europe, these peoples, despite treaties guaranteeing their neutrality, have looked with apprehension upon what they have regarded as the aggressiveness and increasing power of Germany. Their attitude, however, has been purely a defensive one, for, with the possible exception of the Danes, who lost the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein to Prussia and Austria, in 1864, these peoples are not ambitious to obtain greater territory.

Each of them already holds colonial possessions. The Dutch East Indies, including Sumatra, Java, Celebes, most of Borneo and many smaller islands of the archipelago, form the second largest colonial empire in that quarter of the globe. The Belgian Kongo, in Africa, embraces the whole of the territory drained by that river, an area of more than 900,000 square miles. Denmark, not being so densely populated as the other States, has no immediate need of greater foreign possessions. She owns, however, in addition to Iceland and Greenland, three islands in the West Indies.

Portugal has little to fear, so far as concerns the integrity of her territory in Europe, but is interested solely with respect to her colonial possessions. The most important of these are Angola on the west coast and Mozambique on the east coast of Africa. If Portugal should take an active part in the war, as she may do under a long standing treaty of alliance with England, Mozambique, which abuts on German East Africa may become the seat of important operations.

The head of the Mohammedan world, as has been said, is the Sultan of Turkey. Although his territorial domains have been in process of dismemberment for more than a century, the Sultan in his religious capacity has retained an influence over the millions of devotees of the Mohammedan faith, who inhabit northern Africa, Arabia, Persia, part of India and Islands of the sea beyond. These are the regions in which the French and English have imposed their rule upon subject peoples. In Algeria and Egypt, therefore, these Powers have really given hostages to the Sultan. And it is as much owing to their fear of his power to proclaim a "holy war" of all Islam against the invader as to international jealousy over the domination of the Dardanelles, which he possesses, that Turkey owes her independence today.

THE BALKAN PEOPLES.

With respect to the Balkans, we have sketched already the attempts of Russia to push her way further toward the Aegean and have referred to the more recent designs of Austria-Hungary to extend her territory in the same direction. It remains for us to consider the origin and to some extent, the history and national ambitions of those new States erected on the ruins of the Turkish Power in Europe.

It was the heroic struggle of the Greeks for independence which first awakened the interest of the western Powers in the subject peoples of the Balkan Peninsula. In 1827, when it seemed that the Greeks were about to be exterminated altogether, the combined fleets of England, Russia and France destroyed the Turkish squadron at Navarino. Two years later Greece won her freedom.

In no other section of Europe has the tendency toward race unity been stronger than among the Balkan peoples since they achieved their independence. The modern Greeks are the descendants of the Hellenes, a people who before the Christian era established one of the most brilliant and far-reaching civilizations which history records. They inhabit not only the peninsula south of Macedonia, but also the coast line of Thrace as far eastward as the Dardanelles, and Crete and most of the other islands in the Aegean Sea. Between 1909 and 1912 the Greeks had several additions made to their territories by reason of "advices" which the Powers made to the Sultan. At present they dream of uniting all the peoples of their race under one flag and of

with its capital at Constantinople.

The Bulgarians are not a purely Slavic race.

Toward the close of the seventh century the Bulgars, a Turanian race akin to the Huns and Finns, conquered Thrace, a large part of Macedonia and what is now Bulgaria proper, and brought under subjection the Slavs, who had preceded them. But, like so many of the invaders of those times, the Bulgars ultimately were assimilated by the subject race.

reestablishing the Roman Empire of the East,

As we have told already, the Powers, at the Congress of Berlin, in 1878, erected two autonomous States out of Bulgaria, north and south of the Balkan Mountains respectively. In 1885 the peoples of the two sections, who were of one race, took matters into their own hands and declared themselves united. Since then Bulgaria has been practically independent, although she did not formally declare herself so until 1908. Since 1878 there has been a revulsion of feeling against Russian influence, which most of the people of Bulgaria regard as contrary to their best interests. Like the other Balkan peoples, the Bulgarians are ambitious to unite all the branches of their race under the one flag.

The Roumanians, contrary to popular opinion, are not a Slav race. They hold themselves to be descended from Roman colonists of the Dacia of antiquity. The provinces of Moldavia and Wallacia, which constitute the present kingdom, were made autonomous at the close of the Crimean war. In 1878 they were made entirely independent of Turkey, and three years later Charles I, a Hohenzollern prince, was crowned King of Roumania. The people of the Kingdom look forward to the recovery of Bessarabia, which was taken from them and annexed to Russia in 1878, and also to a union with the Roumanians in eastern Hungary.

The only Balkan States actively engaged in the present war at the time of this writing are Servia and Montenegro. Their inhabitants are Slavs and are, in national interests and aspirations, one people. During the middle of the fourteenth century, the Serbs, as they call themselves, ruled over an empire which embraced most of the northern Balkans, so that since then they have formed a large proportion of the population in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Macedonia and Albania.

Servia is the only one of the Balkan States without a seaport. Hence her people must sell their surplus goods to their surrounding neighbors at the price those particular neighbors may be willing to pay. This by no means ideal economic condition has led the Servians to seek an outlet to the Adriatic or the Aegean.

Throughout the centuries during which they were held in subjection by the Turks the Serbs kept alive the national traditions of their one-time greatness. Imbued with a desire to achieve the unity of their race and impelled by economic motives to seek a sea port, they have cherished since the day of their independence the hope of creating eventually a Greater Servia by the absorption of the present territories of Bosnia, Herzegovina and northern Albania.

Because of this ambition they were bitterly disappointed in 1878, when the Powers "invited" Austria-Hungary to administer Bosnia and Herzegovina and permitted her to occupy the Sanjak of Novibazar. Intrenched in the Sanjak, which separated Servia from Montenegro, the superior military power of the Dual Monarchy seemed to have shattered for all time the Pan-Servian dream.

STRUGGLE FOR SUPREMACY.

Having outlined the national ambitions and vital interests of the several peoples now engaged in this world-wide war, as well as those of the smaller States which may become involved in it directly and which will be almost inevitably affected by its outcome; having seen how Europe came to be divided into two great armed camps; we are now ready to take up the narrative of those events which have brought the hostile camps into direct collision. It is the story, not less world-wide, of a gigantic political, diplomatic and commercial struggle, of which this final war grapple is only the climax. Mr. Usher, in his exhaustive study of "Pan-Germanism" says: "The Boer War, Morocco, the strangling of Persia, the war in Tripoli, the Balkan crisis are only incidents in this gigantic struggle in which the very pawns are kingdoms and the control of the entire globe the stake."

In our discussion of Germany and her ally, Austria-Hungary, we dwelt chiefly upon the imperative need for colonial expansion in the case of the former and the harassing race problem which prevented the realization of such expansion for the latter. We have deferred de-liberately the narrative of their more recent efforts to obtain for themselves new possessions and broader markets, because these very efforts constitute one of the most vital factors which have determined the course of world politics for the last quarter of a century and which have cul-minated in the present appeal to arms.

Fifty years ago Africa was known as "The Dark Continent." For three hundred years the nations of western Europe had been so busily engaged in the search for a route to India and in the resultant colonization of the Americas that they had neglected this vast territory lying almost at their very doors. Between 1874 and 1878 the explorations of Livingstone and Stanley through the heart of the African continent focussed upon it the attention of the entire civilized

The interest thus aroused resulted during the next decade in the appropriation of Africa by Europe. Both Italy and Germany participated in the general scramble. But after the final treaties defining the new boundaries had been signed, each of them found that their portion of the spoils was unsuited to colonization by white men. In 1898 the Italians tried to extend the boundaries of their colonies in Somaliland at the expense of Abyssinia, but the Italian Army met with such overwhelming defeat that Italy did not embark upon any further colonial adventures for more than twenty years.

In that same year, 1898, Germany, who had found her possessions in the South Seas equally valueless, saw the United States supplant the decadent power of Spain in the last fragments of her colonial empire in the West Indies and the Orient. Four years later, in 1902, Germany attempted by "peaceful penetration"—the same method by which England had acquired Egyptto secure a foothold in Venezuela. But the United States, whose navy had emerged with added prestige from the war with Spain, enunciated a new interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, which effectively balked Germany's plans in South America. The conquest and absorption of the Boer Republics in South Africa by the British Empire blasted the hopes of further expansion in that direction.
THE PAN-GERMAN SCHEME.

Thus, thwarted at every turn, German statesmen gave up-or postponed-their attempts to obtain colonial possessions over seas and conceived and adopted a new plan whereby to attain their end. Although England was mistress of the seas, Germany for thirty years had been concededly the strongest military Power in Europe. Obviously, her prospects of construct-ing a land empire were vastly better than the chance of ever displacing her rivals in their own element.

With this in mind, her leaders conceived the idea of building up a mighty confederation of confederations to control all the territory between the North Sea and the Indian Ocean. Austrians for a long time had talked of the "Drang nach Osten"—the March to the East, and from 1904, or thereabouts, onward, they cooperated with their allies to accomplish that purpose.

The main features of this stupendous scheme, briefly stated, were these: Austria, backed by the military power of the Triple Alliance, was to supplant Russia in her influence in the Balkan States, which were to be formed into a confeder-Turkey was to be freed from English influence and a railroad stretching from Constantinople to Bagdad was to bring all the country between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf under German domination. Once in possession of this much, Germany and her allies could break Britain's hold on the eastern end of the Mediterranean and, by means of their shorter land route, could wrest from England her over-lordship in Egypt and India.

The Germans, who thoroughly believe in the feasibility of this ambitious enterprise, have never expected to realize it except with the cooperation of their allies and that of the other peoples who inhabit this immense extent of territory. Each of these would have to be compensated. Although few men know all the ramifications of the plan, we may surmise with comparative certainty the contemplated division of the spoils which would follow inevitably so far-reaching a conquest.

Austria would acquire her much desired outlet to Saloniki, together with Palestine and Egypt. Italy would receive Tripoli and the neighboring French colonies. The Balkan States, Turkey and Fersia would be vouchsafed a guarantee of their future independence and control over their own affairs. Germany, finally, would be in a fair way toward the assimilation of the rest of Africa and the whole of England's Empire in India.

Just who is the author of this Pan-German scheme we do not know. Undoubtedly it has been the product of more than one man's mind. Certain it is, however, that few men have done more to further it than the present German Emperor and that coterie of imperialistic and military counsellors who immediately surround him.

CONCILIATING THE TURK.

In the light of what we have said concerning the influence which the Sultan of Turkey holds over the whole of the Mohammedan world, the reader will readily appreciate how vitally important the control of the Turkish Empire was to the success of German plans.

As long ago as 1898 William II had made a tour through Syria, during the course of which he had taken occasion to proclaim himself the protector of all Mohammedans. Later, when the rest of the world was shocked to indignation by the atrocities of the Kurds in Armenia, the Kaiser's Government alone of all the European Powers had given a fair hearing to the Turkish case.

During the next few years German merchants had secured for themselves the major part of the trade of Asia Minor and other parts of the Levant. The German Government had loaned to the Porte, military officers, with a view to effecting a reorganization of the Turkish Army. The Kaiser had made another visit to Constantinople and so, by gradually insinuating himself into the favor of the Sultan, had displaced the British influence on the Bosphorus.

As a result, German capitalists had obtained a concession to extend the Anatolian railroad system in Asia Minor from Skutari, on the Bosphorus, eastward through Syria and Mesopotamia to Bagdad. They had sought the cooperation of English capitalists to finance this project. But the English, although they probably did not suspect the true purpose of this railroad at that time, had been so offended by the openly displayed German sympathy with the Boer cause, that they refused flatly to assist in its construction. From these two incidents began the more acute phase of the estrangement between the British and German Empires.

After protracted negotiations between the German Government and those of the other Powers, the Bagdad Railroad was underwritten in Berlin and the construction work was begun in sections.

THE MOROCCO INCIDENT.

The next scene of operations was at the western extremity of the Mohammedan world, in Morocco. In that country, France, Spain and Germany had large commercial interests. The raids of the tribesmen of the interior into French territory had led the French to give military aid to the Sultan at Fez to suppress them.

Europe was startled, in 1905, to hear that William II had landed at Tangier and had announced that the Sultan was free and independent. Russia's prestige had been damaged by defeat in Manchuria. But by the next year, when the Powers held a conference in Algeciras to discuss the Morocco question, Russia had made peace with Japan and was thus in a position to support France and England. The Powers finally recognized the predominant interests of France and Spain.

A revolution broke out in Turkey in 1908. The Young Turks, a party which had long favored constitutionalism and reform, gained control of the army, captured the capital and compelled the Sultan to restore the constitution which he had established in 1876. After the attempt at a counter-revolution had failed, they forced him to abdicate and then set up another Sultan in his stead. But German influence at Constantinople was not modified by these events, because astute German diplomacy had taken the precaution to ingratiate itself with the Young Turks, as well as with the older regime. Mr. Usher even goes so far as to intimate that the change was effected with the connivance of Abdul Hamid himself.

No sooner had the Young Turks established their power and begun to carry out their program of reform than Bulgaria threw off the suzerainty of Turkey, and Austria-Hungary annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina. Servia began to prepare for war with Austria-Hungary and called upon Russia to support her. Russia began to mobilize her army and Europe seemed to be on the brink of a general war.

After an exchange of diplomatic notes, the German Kaiser cut short the negotiations by massing three army corps on this eastern frontier and giving Russia to understand that Germany would support Austria in the event that Russia should attack that Power. Russia, not yet having recovered from her defeat by Japan, was obliged to recede from her position. Bulgaria and Austria indemnified Turkey for her losses by cash payments. Servia, unable to face the superior military power of Austria-Hungary alone, was forced to swallow her chagrin as best she might. Although Austria evacuated the Sanjak of Novibazar, from this time forward the hostility between Austria and Servia became more and more irreconcilable.

Germany, in 1911, suddenly reopened the Morocco question by despatching the cruiser Panther to Agadir. But this time economic forces, more powerful than fleets and armies, defeated the German plans. British and French bankers, frightened at the prospect of war, withdrew their gold from Berlin, so that when the Kaiser attempted to raise the necessary funds for a mobilization against France, he found it impossible to do so. As a result of negotiations, Germany was obliged to recognize France's rights in Morocco and to take, by way of consolation, some additions to her territory in the Kongo. Since then both Germany and France have been hoarding gold for the present conflict, which to those of the innermost counsels of both Powers appeared inevitable.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN PERSIA.

Encouraged by Germany's discomfiture, the Powers of the Triple Entente, who now began to divine the true magnitude of the Pan-Germanic enterprise, took counter-steps to thwart it. Recent discontent in Egypt and India, together with the feverish activity with which the Bagdad Railway was being pushed toward the Persian Gulf, attracted attention to their threatened interests in those regions.

For years England had opposed inflexibly Russia's advance through Persia, as being a direct challenge to her own possessions in India. But, so imminent had the new danger appeared that, in 1907, the two nations had composed their differences and had divided the country into three zones, a Russian sphere of influence in the north, an English one along the Gulf and a neutral one between these, in which the Shah was still to govern. To outflank the Bagdad Railroad and to facilitate the throwing of Russian and British troops into the country, they now began to build a railroad of their own.

Persia had been a hotbed of revolution and intrigue for five years. One shah after another had plunged the nation deeper and deeper into debt until Russia, who willingly had loaned the money, practically held a mortgage on the country. A constitutionalist party, bent on retrenchment and reform as the only means of saving their country from the grasp of the foreigners, had arisen and after several setbacks had gained control of the government.

The virtual partition of the country by Britain and Russia resulted in an outburst of the national feeling, upon which neither of those Powers had counted. To assist them in carrying out their program of retrenchment, the Persian reformers called in a number of young American financiers. Under the able leadership of one of these men, Morgan W. Shuster, the deficit was turned into a surplus, and for a few months it seemed that Persia, like the newly created Republic of China, was about to take her place among the nations.

But early in 1912 England and Russia intervened, obliged Mr. Shuster and his associates to resign and restored the reactionary regime. Since then Persia has been virtually a vassal State.

Emboldened by their success, the Powers of the Triple Entente already had struck another blow at the Pan-German enterprise, this time at the very instrument by which it was to be made effective. The weak link in the Triple Alliance was that one which bound Italy to her hereditary enemy, Austria. In addition to cherishing fond hopes of ultimately annexing Trent and Trieste—"Italia Irredenta" (Italy Unredeemed) as they call those localities—the Italians of recent years had become commercial rivals of their Austrian allies in Skutari, Albania and Epirus.

By 1911, moreover, Italy had recovered from her defeat in Abyssinia and was ready to resume her imperialistic career by achieving her "manifest destiny" in Tripoli. But Tripoli at that time was a Turkish province, so that to seize it while the Young Turks were still smarting under the loss of Bosnia and Herzegovina, would be to alienate them from the Triple Alliance and so to wreck the entire fabric of the Pan-German scheme.

With all of these factors in mind, England and France made overtures to Italy to withdraw from the Triple Alliance. The treaty of alliance would expire in 1913, when Italy could refuse to renew it without actually breaking faith. If she would engage herself to do so, the three Powers, England, France and Italy, could theneeforth dominate the Mediterranean. Italy could blockade the Tripolitan coast while England prevented the Turks from sending reinforcements through Egypt. If the tribesmen of the interior offered too stubborn resistance, France could lend a hand from her position in Tunis. Thus, after a brief war, Italy could acquire Tripoli for nothing. ITALY BLOCKADES TRIPOLI.

To the Italians, who had never expected to receive much more than Tripoli as the price of their cooperation in the German scheme, the bait was too alluring to refuse. In October, 1911, they suddenly blockaded Tripoli and began war against Turkey. Germany and Austria saw their two allies, on whose assistance they had based their hopes, at each others' throats, and the rest of Europe confidently looked forward to the speedy dissolution of the Triple Alliance.

But England and France had reckoned without their host. The Sultan threatened to proclaim a holy war. For weeks northern Africa was seething with threatened revolt. The English did prevent the passage of troops through Egypt, but did not dare to do more. Italy was left with the prospect of a protracted and expensive war.

The German Kaiser at once took advantage of Italy's predicament to win back her allegiance. If Italy would renew the Triple Alliance in 1913, her navy could seize the Aegean Islands at once; then, after a time, by bringing pressure to bear at Constantinople, he could cajole the Turk into parting with Tripoli in exchange for the restoration of the islands. The bargain was struck, the islands were seized and the fortunes of the Central Powers of Europe seemed to be once more in the ascendant.

The English had been so confident that they had permanently detached Italy from the Triple Alliance that they had withdrawn their naval forces from the Mediterranean and had concentrated practically their entire fleet in home waters. A few months later, Premier Borden, of Canada, in his appeal to the Parliament of the Dominion to contribute three dreadnoughts to the fleet, said: "Twelve years ago the British Navy and the British flag were predominant in every ocean of the world and along the coasts of every continent. Today they are predominant nowhere except in the North Sea."

The present German Kaiser has made it his purpose to do for the German Navy what his grandfather did for the German Navy. The preface to the Germany Navy bill of 1900 contained an enunciation of German naval policy in these words: "But, even if the strongest naval Power should succeed in meeting us with a fleet of superior strength, the defeat of a strong German fleet would so greatly weaken its own power, that, notwithstanding its victory, its own position on the seas would be no longer secure."

During the period of "splendid isolation" England had adhered to the policy of maintaining a navy equal in strength to those of the two next sea Powers combined. When in 1904, the Kaiser had said, "Our future lies on the sea," and again, "The trident should be in our hand," the English had regarded these utterances as mere outbursts of rhetoric, but when Germany passed first France and then the United States in the race for predominant sea power, England began to fear her designs.

By 1912 the financial burden of unabated naval rivalry had become so onerous that Winston Churchill, Britain's First Lord of the Admiralty, openly promised to decrease the English naval program in proportion to any curtailment in Germany's plans. But, since the Germans did not see fit to alter their program, the

The scene of the titanic struggle for world power, in 1912, suddenly shifted back to the Balkans. Bulgaria, Servia, Montenegro and Greece mobilized their combined armies on the Turkish frontier and began war. Whether this Balkan alliance was the instrument with which the Kaiser purposed to extort Tripoli from the Turk, whether it was the result of an attempt by the Triple Entente to create a barrier in the path of Pan-Germanism, or whether the Balkan States formed it on their own initiative is largely matter for conjecture.

RESULTS OF THE BALKAN WARS.

At the outbreak of hostilities the Balkan allies disavowed any intention of territorial aggrandizement, but the lack of concerted action among their military forces soon revealed a pre-arranged division of European Turkey among them. The Montenegrins at once invested Skutari; the Servians overran the Sanjak and northern Albania and pushed on to Durazzo, their coveted port on the Adriatic; the Greeks invaded Epirus and Macedonia and laid siege to Janina and Saloniki. In the eastern theatre of war the Bulgarians besieged Adrianople and drove the main Turkish Army back to Tchatalja, just outside Constantinople. By April, 1913, the Turks, who had already ceded Tripoli to Italy, were ready for peace.

As soon as the peace delegates had assembled at London, Austria-Hungary and Italy demanded that Albania, including Skutari and Durazzo, should be made an independent State. Since this arrangement deprived Montenegro, Servia and Greece of the greater part of their conquests, they insisted on a revision of the original allotment of territory. When Bulgaria, who considered that her army had borne the brunt of the fighting, was disposed to disregard their interests, they combined against her and began a second war.

Roumania joined the allies and marched an army against Sofia from the north, while the Turks took advantage of the quarrel among their recent enemies to recover Adrianople. Within a month Bulgaria was forced to accept the terms dictated by the Balkan allies at Bucharest. Roumania took Silistria, south of the Danube, and Servia and Greece divided most of Macedonia between themselves. Servia compensated Montenegro with half of Novibazar. By a separate treaty at Constantinople, Bulgaria receded Adrianople to Turkey.

When the Balkan allies had first mobilized against Turkey, Austria-Hungary had moved troops toward the Sanjak of Novibazar with the evident intention of reoccupying that territory, which she had abandoned in 1908. Russia had begun a counter-mobilization which threatened to precipitate the long dreaded European war. But France persuaded the other great Powers to hold aloof from the Balkan conflict.

Moreover, Germany and Austria-Hungary were playing for a stake even greater than an unobstructed path to Saloniki. The formation of the Balkan alliance seemed to foreshadow the consummation of that very Balkan Confederation which was to make practicable their "March to the East." The Balkan States themselves seemingly were forging the last link in the chain assuring to Germany the realization of this cherished project.

But after Austria and Italy had insisted on the erection of Albania into an independent State, the whole situation was reversed as in the twinkling of an eye. The Balkan alliance dissolved into its constituent elements, and left Bulgaria and Turkey—the defeated nations—the only possible partners of the Triple Alliance in the peninsula.

Servia and Montenegro had been allowed to conquer the Sanjak and thus block the way to Saloniki. At the same time, Austria's action in preventing Servia from attaining her coveted port on the Adriatic had served only to add fuel to the growing flame of hostility between Austrians and Servians. The acquisition of the new territory undoubtedly gave the Pan-Servian propaganda a tremendous impetus, so that, instead of having smoothed for herself and the German Kaiser their "path to the East," Austria-Hungary found a ferment of discontent seething within her own borders. Pan-Slavism and Pan-Germanism had come face to face at last on the banks of the Save itself, for the Sanjak of Novibazar, formerly erected as a buffer State, had been absorbed by Servia and Montenegro and now a continuous Slavonic barrier had been interposed against the progress eastward of the Germanic Powers.

Then followed the pernicious agitation of the Servian secret societies. Conspiracy culminated in plot and counterplot and, finally, in the assassination of the Austrian heir apparent. If the reader has followed carefully the sequence of events down to this point, the complicated interlocking of antagonistic national ambitions, which has been sketched in the foregoing pages, he will understand why, as was said at the outset, the murder of the Austrian Archduke in Sarajevo was only the lighting of the fuse to the mine, the firing of which has set all Europe aflame.

WHITE, ORANGE AND GRAY PAPERS. Since the outbreak of war each of the governments of Great Britain, Russia, Germany and Belgium has published, by way of justifying its own course, the official communications which passed between the several governments involved from July 23, when Austria-Hungary sent its ultimatum to Servia, to August 4, when the British Ambassador in Berlin asked for his passports. An impartial review of these documents—the White Papers of England and of Germany, the Orange Papers of Russia and the Gray Paper of Belgium—will enable the reader to gain an idea of why and when the several Powers entered the conflict.

After having tried Gavrilo Princip, the assassin of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and several of his accomplices, the Austro-Hungarian Government, on July 23, 1914, sent an ultimatum to Servia. Austria-Hungary demanded that Servia should suppress publications which excited hatred against the Monarchy, should dissolve the "Narodna Odbrana," a Pan-Servian secret society; eliminate without delay all anti-Austrian sentiments from the course of public instruction in Servia; remove from office all civil and military officers engaged in anti-Austrian propaganda and "accept the collaboration in Servia of the agents of the Imperial and Royal Government in the suppression of the subversive movement directed against the territorial integrity of the Monarchy."

The ultimatum further demanded that Servia open a judicial inquiry against participants in the plot of June 28 within her jurisdiction; arrest certain officers compromised by the outcome of the trial at Sarajevo; stop the smuggling of arms across the border into Bosnia and explain the expressions of hostility of certain Servian officials immediately after the assassination. The note closed thus: "The Imperial and Royal Government awaits the reply of the Royal Government at the latest up to Saturday, the 25th of this reacht, at six places in the armsite."

month, at six o'clock in the evening."
On the same day Herr Von Bethman Hollweg, Chancellor of the German Empire, communicated to the British, French and Russian Governments his view that, as the controversy was one which concerned only Austria-Hungary and Servia, other Powers should hold aloof.

On July 24 Servia officially informed Russia of Austria's demands and appealed to the Russian Government for support. Mr. Sazonof, Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, conferred with the French and British Ambassadors in St. Petersburg. He and the French Ambassador pressed their English colleague to urge his Government to openly support their own Governments, in case an international crisis should arise.

Sir Edward Grey, British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, made every effort through Vienna and Berlin to induce the Austro-Hungarian Government to extend the time limit of its ultimatum to Servia. He also proposed to France, Italy and Germany that the four Powers whose interests were not immediately involved should cooperate in an effort to preserve peace, or, at least, to restrict the sphere of prospective hostilities. Germany's attitude remained substantially what it had been from the start—that other Powers should not interfere in what was essentially Austria's and Servia's affair.

During the morning of July 25 England and Russia continued to work for an extension of the time limit to Austria's ultimatum. Russia proposed to Austria that the two Governments undertake conversations relative to the Servian matter, but Austria denied the proposal.

matter, but Austria denied the proposal.

That evening Servia replied to the Austrian note. The Servian Government accepted without reserve all of the conditions imposed excepting that one which specified that Servia should accept the collaboration of Austrian officials within her own territory. The Servian Government said, respecting this demand, that it was impossible to comply with it, because to do so would be to violate the Servian constitution, but it offered to submit this matter to the arbitrament of the Hague Tribunal.

Sir Edward Grey, who foresaw mobilization in Austria and Russia, continued to urge Germany to cooperate with France, Italy and Great Britain to preserve peace.

EFFORTS TO MAINTAIN PEACE.

The next day, July 26, the German Emperor, who had been absent on a yachting cruise in the Baltic, suddenly returned to Berlin. Sir M. de Bunsen, British Ambassador at Vienna, informed Sir Edward Grey that, according to the belief of the German Ambassador there, Russia would "keep quiet during the chastisement of Servia." The Imperial German Chancellor telegraphed to the German Ambassador at St. Petersburg as follows: "After Austria formally declared that she was not interested in acquiring territory, the responsibility for a possible disturbance of the peace in Europe through Russian intervention lies with Russia alone. We still trust that Russia will take no steps that may seriously endanger European peace." He telegraphed to the German Ambassador at Paris to the same effect and urged

St. Petersburg for peace.

That afternoon Russia received news that Austria-Hungary had decreed mobilization. German consuls and envoys in Russia and France informed their Government that mobilization had been ordered in Kief and Odessa in Russia, and that the Fourteenth Corps of the French Army had discontinued its manoeuvres. Sir Edward Grey, through the English Ambassadors at Rome, Paris and Berlin, proposed an immediate conference between representatives of Italy, France, Germany and Great Britain, in London.

the French Government to use its influence at

In communicating Germany's reply to this proposal the next day, Sir E. Goschen, British Ambassador at Berlin, telegraphed to Sir Edward Grey as follows: "Secretary of State says that conference you suggest would practically amount to a court of arbitration and could not, in his opinion, be called together except at the request of Austria and Russia. He could not, therefore, fall in with your suggestion, desirous though he was to cooperate for the maintenance of peace."

He added that the German Secretary of State had assured him that, as yet, Austria was only partially mobilizing and that Germany would not mobilize unless Russia mobilized her forces in the north as well as in the south. Sir Edward Grey replied that he thought the Servian answer should, at least, be treated as the basis for discussion and urged Germany to work for mediation at Vienna. To this the German Imperial Chancellor responded that his Government had started the efforts toward mediation at Vienna and had communicated to Count Berchtold, Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Sazanof's desire for a direct talk with Vienna.

Mr. Sazanof said to the German Military Attache at Petrograd that if Austria should cross the Servian frontier, the military districts in the direction of Austria—Kief, Odessa, Moscow, Kasan—would be mobilized; that those on the German front—Warsaw, Vilna, Petrograd—would not be, under any circumstances. He said that peace with Germany was earnestly desired. Mr. Sazanof added that he was willing to fall in with Sir Edward Grey's plan for a conference of the Powers, or, failing that, to open ference of the Powers, or, failing that, to open direct conversations with Vienna.

Count Mensdorff, Austrian Ambassador at London, in an interview with Sir Edward Grey, informed the latter of Austria's dissatisfaction with Servia's reply. According to Sir Edward, he admitted that, on paper, the Servian reply might seem to be satisfactory; but the Servians had refused the one thing—the cooperation of Austrian officers and police—which would be a real guarantee that in practice the Servians would not carry on their subversive campaign against

On July 28 Austria-Hungary declared war against Servia and began military operations directed toward the Servian capital, Belgrade. The Austro-Hungarian Government declined to open direct negotiations between Vienna and St. Petersburg, and Count Berchtold replied to Sir Edward Grey's proposals that he appreciated the good offices of England, but that they had arrived too late.

The Russian Ambassador at Vienna warned the Austrian Government that if actual war broke out with Servia, it would be impossible to localize it, as Russia was not prepared to give way again, as she had done in 1909. Germany continued her efforts to prevent a rupture between Austria and Russia. The Imperial Chancellor telegraphed the German Ambassador at St. Petersburg: "We are endeavoring continually to cause Vienna to make clear in St. Petersburg the purpose and scope of the Austrian action regarding Servia in an indisputable, and, it is to be hoped, satisfying manner to Russia. The declaration of war made in the meantime makes no difference in this connection."

THE KAISER TO THE CZAR.

The German Emperor supplemented this with a personal message to the Czar, in which he said that he deplored the disquieting impression which Austria's action was making in Russia and assured the Czar that he, William, was exerting all his influence to bring about an understanding between the two Powers.

On July 29, after Austria-Hungary finally had given the other Powers to understand that she would not accept any further discussion on the basis of Servia's note, Russia decreed a partial mobilization, "only directed against Austria."

The Czar replied to the Kaiser's message, protesting against Austria's aggression and imploring his cousin, the Kaiser, to do all in his power to prevent Austria from going too far. William II replied, asserting that Austria did not intend to annex any territory, that he was doing his best to bring about an understanding between Austria and Russia, but that he feared lest military measures on Russia's part might nullify his efforts.

At the same time, the Imperial Chancellor of Germany informed the French Government that French preparations for war, reports of which were becoming more numerous from hour to hour, would compel Germany to proclaim "Kriegsgefahr" (danger of war) as a precautionary measure.

Under date of July 29, Sir E. Goschen, British Ambassador at Berlin, telegraphed to Sir Edward Grey as follows: "I was asked to call upon the Chancellor tonight. His Excellency had just returned from Potsdam.

"He said that should Austria be attacked by Russia, a European conflagration might, he feared, become inevitable, owing to Germany's obligations as Austria's ally, in spite of his continued efforts to maintain peace. He then proceeded to make the following strong bid for British neutrality. He said that it was clear, so far as he was able to judge the main principle which governed British policy, that Great Britain would never stand by and allow France to be crushed in any conflict there might be. That, however, was not the object at which Germany aimed. Provided that neutrality of Great Britain were certain, every assurance would be given to the British Government that the Imperial Government aimed at no territorial acquisitions at the expense of France should they prove victorious in any war that might ensue.

"I questioned His Excellency about the French colonies, and he said that he was unable to give a similar undertaking in that respect. As regards Holland, however, his Excellency said that so long as Germany's adversaries respected the integrity and neutrality of the Netherlands, Germany was ready to give his Majesty's Government an assurance that she would do likewise. It depended upon the action of France what operations Germany might be forced to enter upon in Belgium, but when the war was over Belgian integrity would be respected if she had not sided against Germany."

Sir Edward Grey at once informed the French Government that public opinion in England did not warrant England giving France such support as she had given during the crisis over Morocco, when France primarily was involved and threatened. But he also warned the German Ambassador that the German Government should not be misled by the friendly tone of his conversation into thinking that England would stand aside.

On July 30 Sir Edward Grey couched England's reply to Germany's proposal in these words: "His Majesty's Government cannot for a moment entertain the Chancellor's proposal that they bind themselves to neutrality on such terms."

The Kaiser and the Czar continued to exchange personal telegrams, the one pointing out the danger which Russia's mobilization threatened and the other protesting that the mobilization was not directed against Germany, but only against Austria. The British Ambassador at Vienna informed Sir Edward Grey that unless Russia desisted from her military preparations, the temper of the people there would lead the Austrian Government to take counter steps.

RUSSIA'S EFFORT FOR PEACE.

Russia made a last attempt at reconciliation with Austria by making, through the German Ambassador at St. Petersburg, this proposition: "If Austria, recognizing that her conflict with Servia has assumed character of question of European interest, declares herseif willing to eliminate from her ultimatum points which violate principle of sovereignty of Servia, Russia engages to stop all military preparations." But Austria did not see fit to assent to this proposition.

The next day, July 31, Russia and Austria-Hungary mobilized their fleets and armies and Germany declared Kriegsgefahr (danger of war). Sir Edward Grey told the German Ambassador at London that if Germany and Austria could get any reasonable proposal put forward, which would make it clear that they were striving for peace, that if Russia and France then rejected such proposal, England would consent to hold aloof; but that otherwise, if France became involved, England would be drawn in.

Later in the day Sir Edward sent notes to the French and German Governments, asking them whether, in consideration of the possibility of war, each was prepared to respect the neutrality of Belgium, provided it should not be violated by another Power. He informed the Belgian Government of his action and said he assumed that it would maintain to the utmost of its ability its neutrality.

That night Germany sent ultimatums to both Russia and France. The note to Russia explained that Germany, being menaced by Russia's mobilization, had been obliged to proclaim "danger of war," but that German mobilization must follow unless Russia ceased all warlike measures within twelve hours. The note to France was a peremptory demand for information as to what course France would take in the event of war between Germany and Russia.

The next morning, that of August 1, the French Government replied that it would do "as the best interests of the Republic dictated" and ordered general mobilization simultaneously with the reply. As Russia failed to answer within the time specified, the German Ambassador at St. Petersburg, at ten minutes past seven o'clock in the evening, handed to the Russian Government a declaration of war in these words: "His Majesty, the Emperor, My August Sovereign, in the name of the Empire, taking up the challenge, considers himself in a state of war with Russia."

To Sir Edward Grey's question as to whether they were prepared to respect the neutrality of Belgium, France replied in the affirmative, but the German Government declared that it could not reply to the question categorically.

In a personal telegram to King George of England, the German Emperor engaged himself to refrain from attacking France if Great Britain would guarantee French neutrality. But the next day German troops invaded France and Luxemburg. Germany already had offered Belgium full indemnification for losses sustained and a guarantee of territorial integrity, if Belgium would not oppose the passage of German troops to the French frontiers. On August 3 Germany couched its demands of the Belgian Government in the terms of an ultimatum, at the expiration of which she declared war.

On August 4, King Albert, of Belgium, addressed a personal appeal to King George for England's diplomatic intervention in behalf of the integrity of his country. The British Government at once sent an ultimatum to Germany, saying that unless by midnight Germany should give a satisfactory reply to the question asked on July 31, "His Majesty's Government feel bound to take all steps in their power to uphold the neutrality of Belgium and the observance of a treaty to which Germany is as much a party as ourselves."

That afternoon the German Secretary of State told the British Ambassador that Germany's reply must be an unqualified "No." He explained that "the safety of the Empire rendered it absolutely necessary that the Imperial troops should advance through Belgium." At the expiration of the time named in the ultimatum the British Ambassador in Berlin requested his passports and Great Britain declared war.

THE FIRST YEAR OF THE WAR.

THE DECLARATIONS OF WAR.

Austria declared war on Servia July 28, 1914. lighting the fuse that exploded the European powder magazine. Four days later, on August 1, Germany was at war with Russia, and the next day, without formal declaration, with France, Russia's ally. On August 5, the ninth day, Great Britain became a participant in the struggle, because of the violation of Belgium's neutrality, which had brought that country, also without formal declaration, into the field. On the same day Montenegro, the smallest of kingdoms, cast her lot with the Entente Allies. On August 23, Japan declared war on Germany in consequence of Germany's refusal to give up her Chinese possession of Kiau Chau, and three days later, August 26, Austria formally declared war against Japan. On October 29, Turkish warships bombarded several Russian ports on the Black Sea; Russia naturally accepted this as a declaration of war and the following day declared a state of hostilities to exist between herself and Turkey; on November 5, England and France were formally arrayed against the same power. On May 22, 1915, Italy declared war on Austria.

THE FIGHTING BEGINS.

On July 30, the world was shocked to read of the bombardment of Belgrade, the Servian capital on the Danube, by Austrian river monitors. On August 2, German troops seized the narrow territory of the independent Grand Duchy of Luxemburg. France was already moving her field army toward the frontier, and Britain was straining every nerve to take her part. Such British troops as were available were mobilized as an expeditionary force.

THE FIRST FIGHTING IN THE WEST.

It was an essential part of the German plan of campaign to secure at the earliest possible moment an open way for an advance through Belgium into Northern France. To have delayed the first movements until the mobilization was complete would have risked the success of the operations, for the French would then be ready to come at once to the help of the Belgians.

THE BELGIUM PHASE.

The invasion of Belgium was begun on August 4, when a German column seized the crossing of the Meuse at Visé, where the first fighting on this frontier took place. A Belgian detachment defended the river crossing but was driven across the Meuse and during the fighting the town was set on fire. The main German advance was through Verviers towards the southern front of Liège. The German artillery opened fire on the outer forts of Liège after dark in the evening, and during the night made repeated attacks on the Belgian trenches between the forts. These attacks were repelled and for a week the Belgians held one or two of the forts west of the Meuse but these were destroyed (August 13–15) by the first shots of the giant Krupp howitzers.

While the reduction of the Liège defences was being completed the German mobilization and concentration was taking place and, on August 15, the German forces were setting out on their dash to Paris. Masses of cavalry supported by infantry detachments conveyed on motor cars moved forward on a broad front, driving in the advanced Belgian troops. Here and there skirmishes took place, some of which were at the time exaggerated in the newspaper reports into serious engagements. Local Belgian successes against isolated detachments were represented as great victories. The only serious fight in those early days was the action at the village of Haelen, at the crossing of the river Gethe to the east of Louvain. On August 12, a Belgian division, about 10,000 strong, held the bridges over the little river, and was somewhat rashly attacked by a German cavalry force supported by an infantry brigade and some machine guns. The Germans tried to rush the bridges, but were beaten off with heavy loss.

Despite minor successes, it was, however, impossible for the Belgians to hold back the advancing tide of invasion, which swept irresistibly on. One force under von Kluck moved straight on Brussels; a second, under von Buelow, crossed the Meuse at Huy and advanced upon Namur, and a third came through the Ardennes and struck at the line of the Meuse above Namur. Brussels fell on August 20, the Belgian army fled to Antwerp and the German army, having passed the capital, started south for Paris. The Belgian phase ended on August 22, with the abrupt fall of Namur and the opening battles between the German armies and the Anglo-French forces of the north.

FRENCH DISASTERS.

The mobilization of the French army was begun on July 31, when the news of the German mobilization reached Paris. On Friday August 7, a French column from Belfort marched across the border, drove a German detachment out of Altkirch, and next day pushed on to and occupied Mülhausen, an important railway junction and a great industrial center. But the whole movement was premature, and the success was short-lived. Strong German forces were concentrated near Mülhausen, and on the 10th the French were forced to retire across the frontier.

After this check nothing serious was attempted until the mobilization had made further progress. By the end of the second week of August five French armies had been formed, and were massing on a long line extending from the Swiss frontier on the right to that of Belgium on the left.

Meantime the British troops had arrived on the extreme left, and were concentrated in the vicinity of Cambrai. When the general advance of the French left began the British moved forward to a position inside the Belgian border, with its center at Mons.

This forward movement was part of a general advance of all the French armies. On August 15, a French column had pushed forward into the Ardennes and driven a German detachment out of Dinant on the Meuse, a few miles south of Namur. In the second week of August a general advance of the French center and left was ordered and Lorraine was invaded. But the Germans were everywhere advancing. A series of great battles took place on a front of about two hundred miles and, on August 24, the French armies from Switzerland to the Belgian frontier were retiring.

After the fall of Namur the British about

After the fall of Namur the British about Mons were struck in front and flank by overwhelming forces and retreated southward protecting the left of the broken French line.

On August 26 the Germans were in full pursuit of the Allies. All along the line west of Verdun the Allies were retreating and the Germans were scoring a series of successes. Still further to the west large masses of German cavalry, supported by infantry detachments conveyed on motor-cars, were moving into the north of France between the British left and the Channel forts. The Germans occupied Lille and Amiens, cutting the railway to Calais and Boulogne.

An important step was taken on September 5, when Great Britain, France, and Russia signed a treaty which pledged the three governments "not to conclude peace separately during the present war," and "when the terms of peace come to be discussed no one of the allies will demand conditions of peace without the previous agreement of each of the other allies."

A number of important political moves were made by the French about this time. On August 26, the French government, principally Socialist, which had wavered in the crisis and had even discussed giving up Paris without a struggle, was reorganized and the strongest men of France were included in the cabinet, ex-Premier Millerand being made minister of war.

Somewhat later, Gen. Joffre, the French Commander in Chief, dismissed scores of general officers from commands in which they had failed to distinguish themselves.

On September 3, the French government decided to remove from Paris to Bordeaux and the German advance guards reached a point fifteen miles from the outskirts of Paris; but when General von Kluck, commanding the German right wing, attempted to change his course and march his columns across the front held by the British army, so as to strike between the British army and the French army next in line, he was attacked in flank by a new French army, specially formed for this purpose, while, at the same time, the British moved against his front and a second French army sought to separate his own left wing from connection with the German army next in line to the northeast. With great skill General von Kluck succeeded in extricating himself from this dangerous position, and fell back behind the Aisne.

BATTLE OF THE MARNE.

When the Germans halted their retreat on the lines of the Aisne, the French held a line from Paris to Verdun, cut deeply to the south. On this line General Joffre had been concentrating his forces since the opening defeats. Now the Germans were in turn threatened with envelopment.

The decisive point in the Battle of the Marne was about La Fère Champenoise, and the first heavy blow was struck here by General Foch. On September 9 the French defeated the Germans in a number of terrific engagements and drove all the German armies from Lorraine to Lagny back in a complete defeat which amounted to a rout at certain points. In this battle more than 3,000,000 were engaged, the losses were not less than 500,000 and the battle front was nearly two hundred miles long.

ON THE AISNE.

Between the Marne and the Aisne the Germans rallied and the position behind that river where they made their stand was admirably chosen. The fall of Maubeuge freed a German army which came south and reinforced von Kluck. In the next few days the Germans established a line from the Oise at Noyon to the Argonne. Every effort of the allies to drive them failed.

The French made a desperate effort to turn the Germans out by attacking their right flank and turning it, coming in about St. Quentin. But this failed, and in a few more days the line had begun to mount toward Belgium, each side meeting the other's efforts with new battalions. Meantime the Germans directed their attention toward making their position in Belgium secure by besieging Antwerp, which fell after a ten days' siege on October ninth.

Just before this surrender the British had been taken out of their trenches along the Aisne and sent north to fill the gap between the French battle line and the sea. Their objective was Antwerp, but the fall of this town ruined their plans and they were again left to face an overwhelming attack by new German armies.

BATTLES OF FLANDERS.

Following the final "consolidation" of the allied line came a series of desperate battles in an attempt of the Germans to reach the ports of Calais and Boulogne, from which they could hope to control the English channel. Dixmude was taken and Dunkirk almost fell, the British were driven almost to Ypres, and the French were forced back near Arras; but the attacks ended November 15 when, under the eyes of the kaiser, the famous Prussian guard tried to take Ypres and failed with huge losses. The British held Ypres despite a 50 per cent loss and against very superior forces, by some estimated at three or four times their number.

At the end of this period the Germans were in possession of a large part of Belgium and had won a few thousand square miles of territory in France; but they had failed to take Paris or the Channel ports and they could no longer afford to neglect the Russian menace.

From November 15 to the end of the first year of the war, the western campaign from the German side was defensive, save for local offensive moves. The Allies repeatedly attempted to break this defensive; but on the whole no changes of strategic importance took place up to the close of the first year of the war.

ON THE EASTERN FRONT.

Wholly unlike the stubborn trench warfare that has marked all but the first phase of the western fighting has been the conduct of the war on the eastern front. Here campaign after campaign has been fought, with maneuvering of gigantic armies on a vast stage. Smashing blows have been delivered by both sides, but mainly by the Germans.

In the beginning the Austro-German military staffs erred in their estimate of the time needed for the concentration of Russia's army. Six weeks was the shortest period they gave.

RUSSIAN INVASION OF EAST PRUSSIA.

To the surprise even of the allies, the Russians moved within three weeks. As the German "fan" was opening through Belgium, the Russians pushed large forces into the Mazurian lakes district in East Prussia, while more than 300 miles away, on an air line, their forces were driving into eastern Galicia, and the advance guard of a huge army was engaging the Austrians at Krasnik, south of Lublin. Fugitives were coming into Berlin and Vienna telling of the terrors of Cossack raids.

The Germans had to weaken the force of their blow against France by diverting large forces into East Prussia, while the Austrians had to guard Lemberg instead of driving home their advance against Warsaw.

Their very swiftness, however, brought upon the Russians one of the great disasters of the war. After other commanders had vainly striven to stop the czar's forces in East Prussia, the kaiser called from his retirement General von Hindenburg, a veteran officer on the retired list, and gave him command of an army which was concentrating about Posen for its liberation from the invaders. General von Hindenburg had during his active service commanded the German forces in East Prussia, and had an intimate knowledge of the country.

Gathering reserves, the garrisons of forts and what first line troops he could, von Hindenburg on August 27 struck the Russians at Tannenberg, south of Allenstein, and in three days practically annihilated an army of more than 250,000 men, capturing over 100,000 prisoners and killing and drowning tens of thousands more. Other swift blows that followed sent the forces under the Russian Gen. Rennenkampf back behind the line of the Kovno-Grodno forts.

RUSSIAN INVASION OF GALICIA.

Yet this disaster did not stop the advance of the Russians. They had defeated the Austrians at Rawaruska September 3, and taken Lemberg, they had won a battle near Lublin September 5, and on the twenty-second they took Jaroslav and invested the great fortress of Przemysl. By October 22 they were conquering the Carpathian passes leading into Hungary, and their Cossacks were raiding well into the plains.

THE FIRST WARSAW DRIVE.

The German attempt to help Austria in this crisis took the shape of a sudden drive at Warsaw, through central Poland. Russia had made two great efforts, the chief endeavor directed against Austria, which had succeeded, the second against East Prussia, which had failed. But in doing this she had left central Poland bare of troops, and Germany now struck straight through the unguarded center at Warsaw in an attempt to seize this great fortress town. Hastily the Russians were forced to draw back from Hungary and the Carpathians and retire so far in Galicia as to raise the siege of Przemysl (Peremysl).

For ten days, October 14–24, a fierce struggle went on and the Germans won their way to within seven miles of Warsaw and five of Ivangorod, and forced a passage across the Vistula midway between these strongholds. But out from Novo Georgievsk fortress northwest of Warsaw the Russians suddenly launched 100,000 cavalry, which bent back the German left flank and compelled a retreat to the frontier.

GALICIAN CAMPAIGNS.

In consequence of the German reverse the Austrians suffered a succession of severe defeats. Their armies were broken in a big Russian victory at Jaroslav on November 5, and part were crowded back on Krakow and part into the Carpathian passes, already partly choked with snow. So severely shaken were the Austrians that the Russians reached the outer lines of the Krakow defenses, penetrating to Wielicza, only seven miles from the city, on November seventh.

At this time Gen. von Mackensen came into public notice. General von Hindenburg had been placed in general charge of the eastern campaign, and to von Mackensen was intrusted another swift blow that would engage the Russians until the Austrians had time to recover.

THE SECOND WARSAW CAMPAIGN.

At the moment that the Russian armies were pushing toward Posen and their advance on November 7 had even captured Pleschen, on German soil southeast of that city, von Mackensen was gathering a large army based on the fortress of Thorn. He suddenly advanced, and on November 13–16 smashed Russian guarding corps on both sides of the Vistula and pushed on toward Lodz and Warsaw.

So rapid was the march in the difficult country that by November 22, von Mackensen's strong advance forces had penetrated to Brzeziny, about twelve miles east of Lodz. This rapidity, however, almost cost a great disaster, for a large part of this army, perhaps 110,000 men, was surrounded by the Russians, who hurried from south and north. The Germans cut their way out to a line west of Lodz after three days of most remarkable fighting.

Fresh forces were rushed up by the Germans, their lines were reformed, and on December 6 they took Lodz. Berlin then announced that the Russian army was broken and could not make a stand before Warsaw, but on the line of the Bzura and Rawka rivers the czar's forces stood, and six days of most determined attacks failed to dislodge them. Russians made heavy attacks early in January, and Germans again launched assaults early in February, but the lines here remained substantially the same up to July first.

GERMAN VICTORY IN MAZURIAN LAKES REGION.

While the chief armies had been engaged in the battles west of Warsaw the Russians had been slowly invading East Prussia again, and late in January had turned the head of the Mazurian lakes near Gumbinnen and were once more threatening Koenigsberg. Snow was deep on the ground and they took security in this fact.

Suddenly on February 28 a big German force that had plowed through the snow descended on their right wing to the north of Gumbinnen and sent it flying in rout. Another force struck the left wing at Lyck, and then the two German columns converged upon the disorganized center. The Russians strove heroically to extricate themselves in a series of battles in the snow, but they lost more than 100,000 prisoners and most of their equipment.

It was this victory that paved the way for the German advance on Mitau and Riga, and its effect was felt along the whole Russian line. The Germans drove well into northern Poland, threatening the fortress of Osovietz and taking Pryzasnyz in the direction of Novo Georgievsk, while in Bukowina the Austrians retook Czernowitz and raided into Bessarabia.

AUSTRIAN REVERSES.

Von Mackensen's drive for a time relieved the pressure on the Austrians, and by mid-December their armies had been reformed with a leavening of German troops, and they undertook an offensive against the weakened Russian lines in Galicia, advancing from Krakow and the Carpathians. The Przemysl garrison of more than 100,000 men also made a sortie to break through and join the armies coming through the passes. The Austrian movements were slow and ill timed, however, and the Russians were able to concentrate against the three armies in turn, smashing the Krakow forces near Tarnow on December 25 and the others within a week.

So severely were the Austrians defeated that the czar's forces were able to establish themselves firmly on the Tarnow line—so as to threaten an advance on Krakow—to overrun Bukowina, and to drive ahead into the Carpathian passes, not to be dislodged again on this line until von Mackensen's drive in the spring.

With the surrender of the Austrians at Przemysl on March 22, after a five months' siege, the tide again turned for the Russians. Some 250,000 men and many guns thus released were hurried into the Carpathians, and in a campaign extending to April 14 they broke through Dukla, Lupkow, Rostok, and other passes and established themselves at Sztropko, twenty miles inside Hungary. They also steadily hammered the enemy before Uzsok pass and beat back all attempts of the Austrians to turn their left wing in Bukowina.

RUSSIAN REVERSES.

In the latter part of April, however, warning began to come from Petrograd of a great concentration by the Germans east of Krakow intended to strike at the point where the Russian line bent into the Carpathians.

The blow fell late in April, and after a great bombardment by such masses of artillery as had never before been used by a field army, Gen. von Mackensen broke through the Russian position at Gorlice and Tarnow. He then began the smashing drive that retook Przemysl on June 3 and Lemberg on June 24, cleared the czar's troops out of most of Galicia, and led to a renewed advance toward Brest-Litovsk and the rear of Warsaw.

As von Mackensen drove eastward he compelled the Russians to give up all their hard won positions in the Carpathians and retire before the revivified and more confident Austrians.

THE SUCCESSFUL WARSAW DRIVE.

Once Galicia was cleared the Germans inaugurated a smashing and successful drive on Warsaw from north, west, and south, the whole movement being under the general direction of Field Marshal von Hindenburg.

Early in the spring the Germans under General von Bülow had invaded northern Russia. This force worked its way southward and effected a junction with von Hindenburg's army.

From the south von Mackensen resumed his advance, his German forces working with the Austrians to inflict smashing blows upon the Russians from this direction. Step by step the Austro-German armies pounded their way toward the city from north and south, while on the west activities along the line of intrenchments that had so long held off the Germans in that section were resumed.

Great masses of Germans troops were now flung across the East Prussian frontier and before the apparently irresistible power of the Teutons engaged in this wide encircling movement, the armies of the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas began to fall back. Przasnysz, to the north of Warsaw, was occupied, and the German armies swept on, until by July 19 they had forced the Russians back to the line of the Narew River and were within twenty miles of their goal. The fortress of Ostrolenka was taken and the key to Warsaw on the north, the Novo Georgievsk for-tifications, was approached. To the south tifications, was approached. Radom was occupied and the Russian lines of communication in the Lublin region threatened.

Then began a tightening of the German lines around the capital. The Teutons forced their way past the Blonie line southwest of the city, pushed their way across the Narew River, below Ostrolenka, and the battering at the fortified gates of the city was begun in earnest on August 3 by Bavarian troops under command of Prince Leopold of Bavaria.

SERVIA'S PART IN THE WAR.

Of the belligerent nations, none, save Belgium, has been tried more sternly than Servia, on whose behalf the great Powers went to war. Her efforts contributed substantially to the crippling of Austrian military efficiency. Three times during the first year of the war huge Austrian armies invaded Servia, and each time they were hurled back, crippled and defeated. On December 2, 1914, the Austrians captured Belgrade and occupied a large portion of the country. But a week later the Servian army, commanded in person by King Peter I, turned upon the invaders, pierced the Austrian lines and pursued their foes beyond the frontier. More than onethird of the Austrian army was lost, and Servia was not again invaded during the first year of the war.

ENTRANCE OF TURKEY.

Two events at the outset of the war paved the way for Turkey's participation. Nearing completion in British shipyards were two dreadnoughts with which Turkey intended to overcome the naval superiority of Greece and win back Ægean islands taken from her in the Balkan These the British seized. While Turkey was still fuming over the incident the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau slipped away from the British fleet in the Mediterranean and took refuge in the Dardanelles. Germany promptly turned over these vessels to Turkey under the guise of a sale.

The allies demanded that all the Germans on the cruisers should promptly be sent out of Turkey; Turkey demanded her dreadnoughts. While the dispute was going on several other troubles came up. Then on October 29 Turkish warships, including the Goeben and Breslau—commanded by German officers-made attacks on Odessa and other Russian ports in the Black Sea and on Russian shipping.

The Turkish government tried to smooth over this incident, but would not give in to demands of the allies that all German officers be dismissed from the navy. Consequently on November 5, Great Britain and France formally declared war.

In an effort to stir up the Mohammedans of Egypt, India, Persia, Algeria, and Morocco against the allies, the Shiekh-ul-Islam at Constantinople on November 16 proclaimed a holy war. Its only important effect was to lead to the repudiation of the sultan as head of the faithful by Mohammedan chiefs in those regions.

First hostilities consisted of naval raids by both sides in the Black Sea. Then Russia hurried an expedition toward Erzerum, in the Caucasus, in the hope of catching the Turks unprepared and of stirring up a general revolt of the Armenians. After heavy losses they were driven back to their own territory late in November, and in December the Turks sent a strong expedition against Tiflis. This came to disaster January 3-4, when the Russians annihilated an army corps near Ardahan and put two others to rout later. Since then the fighting in that region has been in the nature of a series of detached campaigns that have spread below Tabriz in Persia and have yielded no large results to either side.

Meanwhile a British expedition from India seized the mouth of the Euphrates river and made its way up the valley to the mouth of the Tigris. Thus the British got control of a rich region and closed to European powers the last outlet to the Indian ocean, the Persian, control of which Germany has long sought with her Bagdad railway and other plans. Russia also has coveted this prize. Fighting occasionally took place in this valley, but the number of men engaged was small.

Great Britain also seized this opportunity to make secure her hold on Egypt, which she had long held as a nominal dependency of Turkey. A protectorate over Egypt was proclaimed on December 17, Khedive Abbas Hilmi was deposed and Prince Hameil Kemal was made sultan. The island of Cyprus, important in the command of the eastern Mediterranean, was formally annexed.

An ambitious attempt was made by the Turks, led by German officers, to raid the Suez canal and so cut the communications of Great Britain with the far east. During the winter large forces were gathered in Palestine, and late in January and early in February they advanced across the desert. Forces of Turks crossed the canal on February 4, but they were met by the native and Australian troops and severely defeated.

CAMPAIGN AT THE DARDANELLES.

From February 21 to March 18, a British and French fleet—composed of at least thirty-two powerful vessels, mostly of battleships of the predreadnought era, but including the superdreadnought Queen Elizabeth—hammered at the forts at the entrance to the straits. They silenced and practically destroyed the outer ones and on March 18 attempted to overwhelm those at the narrows. This latter attempt resulted in the loss to the British of the battleships Irresistible and Ocean and to the French of the battleships Bouvet and Gaulois, and in serious injuries to other big ships.

Under a rain of shells from the warships the first troops made landings at five places on the western end of the Gallipoli peninsula and on the south shore of the straits on April 25. It was one of the most difficult undertakings in the history of war, for the Turks had prepared elaborate entanglements even in the water, and 50,000 men. with large forces of artillery, put the invaders under a deadly fire. Nevertheless, within four days an army of some 80,000 had been securely landed and a system of supply had been arranged.

Then followed most desperate and continuous fighting. The Turks bravely attacked again and again in attempts to drive the invaders into the sea and the allies launched a series of general assaults that gradually won them a way through the maze of defenses and brought them close to the tops of the hills overlooking the forts of the narrows. The British battleship Goliath was sunk in these operations on May 11.

In the middle of May the allies seemed to be in a serious plight because the fleet was compelled to cease its active support of the army in order to avoid a German submarine that had made its way through the Mediterranean. This undersea boat sunk the battleship Triumph on May 25 and the Majestic and Agamemnon on May 27. But in the attacks made by the army throughout June and July the allied fleet again took part.

ENTRANCE OF ITALY.

A substantial accession to the cause of the Allies was gained when Italy at last declared war on Austria on May 22. Soon after that date Italian troops began operations along the Austrian frontier, but up to the close of the first year of the war had been unable to break through the Austrian lines.

THE WAR AT SEA.

One of the most important aspects of the war has been the triumph of British sea-power, which has never been seriously menaced, even by Germany's clever use of submarines. It would have been impossible for German men-ofwar to survive on the surface of the waters. The several German commerce-destroyers which were at large when the war opened were run down and sunk. One great achievement of note stands to the credit of the German navythe action between the squadrons of Admiral Count von Spee and Rear-Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock off Coronel, Chili, which was fought in heavy weather, November 1, 1914. Von Spee made skillful use of his superior batteries, and with small loss to himself sunk Cradock's flagship, the cruiser Good Hope, and the cruiser Monmouth. None of the crews of the ships that went down was saved. The cruiser Glasgow, the other fighting unit in Cradock's fleet, was damaged but not destroyed.

Strong British squadrons were sent to hunt down the Germans, and the one commanded by Admiral Sturdee met von Spee at the Falkland Islands December 8. The Germans had been driven from the Pacific by Japanese and other warships and undertook a raid on the Falkland naval station. As the ships steamed toward the harbor mouth they were attacked by the battle-ship Canopus, the battle cruisers Invincible and Inflexible and four smaller cruisers. All the German vessels but the Dresden were sunken, and this met its doom March 22, when the cruisers Glasgow and Kent found it in the neutral waters of Juan Fernandez Island. On account of the violation of her waters in this last engagement Chile made a strong protest to Great Britain and received a full apology.

In the North Sea only two real engagements took place in the first year of the war, the waters having been so thickly strewn with mines by both sides that it was dangerous for the fleets to attempt any ambitious maneuvers.

Early in the war, August 28, a British squadron under Admiral Beatty made a daring raid on the German vessels sheltered under the guns of the Helgoland forts. At least six battle cruisers and many light cruisers and torpedo boats engaged in this venture. The British asserted that they sunk at least two destroyers, but the Germans admitted only the loss of the cruiser Ariadne and a destroyer.

Following raids by German battle and armored cruisers on the east coast of England in November and December, a German squadron was intercepted on such an errand January 24 and engaged by British battle cruisers. The armored cruiser Bluecher was sunken and others were badly damaged. The Germans asserted that the British battle cruiser Tiger was sunken. but the British official and unofficial reports agreed that the Tiger got to port badly damaged.

In the Baltic there have been several brushes of Germans and Russians. Although the great German fleet can easily control this sea, few chances have been taken by the largest ships because of the danger from mines and submarines. In a battle October 11 the large Russian cruiser Pallada was sunken. In skirmishes in the Black Sea some small warships have been sunken.

Of even greater interest than these operations were the dramatic exploits of the German raiders that were loosed on allied commerce in the beginning of the war. It was eight months before they were all rounded up, and they did damage that ran well above $100,000,000.

Most famous of these raiders was the little Emden—of less than 14,000 tons but of twentysix knots speed—which coursed the waters of the far east and did damage estimated at $20,000,000 up to November 10, when the Australian cruiser Sydney caught it at Cocos Island, in the Bay of Bengal, and drove it ashore.

This ship destroyed at least twenty-two vessels. It entered the Bay of Bengal September 10 and sunk six of them. It appeared off Calcutta September 27 and went to other harbors and spread terror among all the shipmasters in the east.

The most remarkable exploit was its invasion of the harbor of Penang. Flying a Japanese flag, and with a fourth false funnel rigged, it passed the forts. It went between a British destroyer and the Russian cruiser Jemstchug, apparently to come to anchor, and suddenly torpedoed both. Then it escaped.

A large fleet of fast cruisers was sent out to find it and finally it was rounded up as it tried to destroy the wireless station at Cocos Island. Some members of its crew, left behind as the Sydney approached, made their way to Arabia and finally arrived at Berlin.

Two of the raiders, unable to keep at sea longer, sought refuge at Newport News, Va.—the Prinz Eitel Friedrich and the Kronprinz Wilhelm.

SUBMARINE TRIUMPHS.

In submarine warfare the balance sways in Germany's favor. By long odds, the most notable submarine feat of the war was the sinking of the British armored cruisers Aboukir, Cressy, and Hogue by the German submarine U-9, commanded by Captain Otto Weddigen, on September 22, with a loss of more than 1,500 lives. But this disaster taught the British how to safeguard their ships against submarines, and in future it was much more difficult for the underwater raiders to get at them. Weddigen himself was lost with all his men on the giant new submarine U-29, when she was sunken by a British merchantman on March 25, 1915.

Among the other triumphs of German submarines was the destruction of the British dreadnought Audacious, off the Irish coast, October 27. 1914, by means not yet definitely known, and of the battleship Formidable, in the English Channel, on New Year's Day, 1915, with a loss of 700 lives. The British battleship Bulwark was blown up while at anchor off Sheerness on November 26, with all her crew, but it is supposed that this was due either to spontaneous combustion in her magazines or to an infernal machine. The Austrians have been busy with submarines since Italy entered the war. On July 7 they sunk the armored cruiser Amalfi, and on the 19th the Garibaldi, which latter, however, accounted for the submarine which struck her. An Austrian submarine was also credited with the sinking of the French armored cruiser Léon Gambetta in the Adriatic, with a loss of 600 lives, on April 27.

On their part, the British submarines have scored several brilliant feats, Commander Max Horton, in the submarine E-9, late in September sunk the German cruiser Hela in the Helgoland Bight, and on October 6 took his craft up the mouth of the Ems, where he attacked the biggest game in sight, which happened to be a mere destroyer. On July 2, while working in cooperation with the Russian Baltic fleet, he sunk the German battleship Pommern. Another British submarine dived under five rows of mines at the Dardanelles and sunk the Turkish battleship Masudieh on December 13. In May a sister craft of this vessel repeated the trick, and showed her periscope at the entrance to the Golden Horn, sinking every Turkish craft she met.

Newport, Rhode Island (c. h. Newport Co.), is a port and famous summer resort on Narragansett Bay. It is a favorite watering-place of people of great wealth who have here many costly summer residences. Overlooking and guarding the harbor are Fort Greble and Fort Adam, and a United States torpedo station, war college, and naval hospital are near by. It has a large trade in fish. Newport was settled in 1639 by William Coddington and other dissenters from the Puritan church of Massachusetts, and a century later had about 5,000 inhabitants. In 1770 Newport was surpassed by Boston only in the extent of its trade, which was considerably greater than that of New York. It suffered greatly during the Revolution, however, and never recovered its commercial importance, so that in 1870 its population was no larger than in 1770. During part of the Revolutionary struggle Newport was occupied by the French allies of the Americans, who were so favorably impressed with France.

It has extensive glass-factories, opteries, agricultural implement shops, carriage factories, organ and piano factories, etc. A Lutheran college and a Roman Catholic college are located here.

Ottawa, Ontario, cap, Canada, is not only a most important town socailly and politically, but is the center of a great lumber trade, due to its position on the Ottawa River, which brings down logs from the interior. This river forms the great Chaudière Falls at Ottawa, and, with its branches, the rapidly flowing Gatineau and Rideau rivers, furnishes motive power for many lumber- and flour-mills, and for factories in which agricultural implements, machinery, ironware, bricks, etc., are made. The very handsome Parliamentary buildings, including the circular library, stand in spacious grounds on a bluff overlooking the river, and crowned by the fine Victoria Tower (180 ft.). Rideau Hall, the governor-general's residence, two cathedrals, the national art gallery, and the museum of the Geological Survey are noteworthy buildings. There are various educational institutions, including the Ottawa University and a normal school. The city was founded under the name of Bytown in 1829, but was not incorporated until 1854, when its name was changed to Ottawa. In 1858 it was selected by Queen Victoria as the capital of the two Canadas.

Ottumwa, Iowa (c. h. Wapello Co.), is a trade center in an agricultural region, in which there are extensive coal-fields. To these may be added Somerville Hall (1879). Lady Margaret Hall, and St. Hugh's Hall, all for women. The authentic annals of Oxford begin in 912; when it was annexed by Edward the Elder, king of the West Saxons. It was a place of strategical importance and one of the political centers in the middle ages; it was a meeting-place of the witenagemot. Harold Harefoot was proclaimed king there in 1036, and died there in 1039. The population in the time of Edward the Confessor is estimated at 3,000; in 1086 it was only 1,700. The castle was besieged by Stephen in 1141-42, Matilda escaping then over the frozen river. The city was the Royalist headquarters in the Civil War, and was taken by Parliamentarians under Fairfax in 1646. Oxford is the seat of an Anglican bishop.

Paris, cap. France (cap. Seine), is the third largest city of the world, and as much of a center for commercial and manufacturing occupations as it is for art, literature, science, fashion, and kindred interests. The fancy goods industry takes the first place, including gold and silver-work, jewelry, dressmaking, high-class cabinet-making, and all manufactures known as French goods, and employs 500,000 work-people. Paris is strongly fortified, and extends along both northern and southern banks of the Seine, in which lies the Ile de la Cité, the earliest original site of the city. On this small island, the heart of Paris, are some ancient buildings; one group includes the Palais de Justice, the Conciergence, a prison which won evil fame during the Revolution, and the exquisite Sainte Chapelle. At the eastern end of the island stands the noble cathedral of Notre Dame. The two banks of the Seine are connected by numerous bridges, some of them old and of handsome design. On the left, or southern, bank are the Quartier St. Germain, the home of the French aristocracy, and the Diplomatic Corps; and the Quartier Latin, famous for its picturesque student life. Here are located schools of art, medicine, law, science, literature, and the like, the Institute of France and the University of Paris, including the Sorbonne, for the faculties of literature and science, with about 12,000 students. Here, also, is Mont Ste. Geneviève, crowned by the Panthéon, set apart as a mausoleum for Frenchmen considered worthy of fame, the interior of which is decorated by well-known artists depicting episodes in France's history. The gardens of the Luxembourg containing the Luxembourg Palaee, where the Senate convenes, and the noted gallery of modern painting and sculpture; the Observatory; the Chamber of Deputies; the Hôtel des Invalides, containing a museum of artillery, and Napoleon I.'s tomb; the great Salpétrière hospital; the factory of the Gobelins; the Odéon theater; and the Jardin des Plantes are among the more celebrated institutions on the south bank of the Seine. The Hôtel Cluny, an old mansion containing collections of mediæval objects, lace, carriages, etc., is built on the site of the palace of the Frankish kings, and shows ruins of Roman baths. On the right bank of the Seine lies the magnificent open space known as the Place de la Concorde, flanked by the broad tree-bordered Champs Elysées, near which is the Elysée Palace where the President of the Republic resides, and by the gardens of the Tuileries, a royal palace destroyed during the Commune. These gardens extend to the Louvre, one of the most beautiful palaces in the world, which was at first a fortress and was rebuilt by Francis I. in 1541. It contains priceless treasures of art, both paintings and sculpture. The social life of Paris and much of its business concentrate about the grand boulevards, broad tree-shaded avenues which girdle the older part of the city. Two triumphal arches, erected by Louis XIV., the Porte St. Martin, and the Porte St. Denis, divide the stream of traffic on the busiest of these boulevards, and in their vicinity are the Madeleine, a church fashioned like a Greek temple, and modern painting and sculpture; the Observatory; which girdle the older part of the city. Iwo trumphia arches, erected by Louis XIV., the Porte St. Martin, and the Porte St. Denis, divide the stream of traffic on the busiest of these boulevards, and in their vicinity are the Madeleine, a church fashioned like a Greek temple, and the magnificent Opéra, celebrated alike for its music and its architecture, and for its museum of dramatic history. The Palais Royal, built by Cardinal Richelieu, the scene of many notable gatherings of historical personages and containing the Théâtre Francais; the Hôtel de Ville, a reproduction of the one burned in 1871, splendidly decorated; the national library, of about 2,500,000 books, and considered to be the richest library of the world as regards rare books and old and modern bindings; the Bourse; the quaint little church of St. Germain l'Auxerrois, dating from the 13th century, from whose belfry sounded the signal for the massacre of the Huguenots of France on St. Bartholomew's Day; and the curious tower of St. Jacques, a fragment of an ancient church are all clustered on the right bank. There, also, are the Halles Centrales, the great markets of Paris. There are numerous columns, monuments, and triumphal arches, the largest of which is the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile commenced by Napoleon I., commemorating various events in the turbulent history of France. The Palace of the Trocadéro, erected for the Universal Exhibition of 1878, has a hall capable of holding 5,000 spectators; and across the Seine the Eiffel tower, erected for the exhibition of 1889, reaches a height of 984 feet. There are many churches of interest in the city, both for age or architecture or for decoration, but the most prominent is the church of the Sacré Cœur, which stands alone on the top of Montmarte, and commands the whole capital. It is modern, and as yet unfinished, and forms a vast basilica in the Roman style, with a Byzantine dome 272 ft. high. The Bois de Boulogne is a great park in the city, affording a fashionable driving place and promenade and capital under the Capetians (10th century); was largely developed under Philip Augustus and St. Louis; suffered from civil strife under Charles VI.; was entered by Henry V. of England in 1420, but expelled the English in 1436; was the scene of the massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572; and was the scene of many of the leading events in the first revolution and in those of 1830 and 1848, as well as during the Commune in 1871. International expositions were held here in 1855, 1867, 1878, 1889, and 1900.

Parkersburg, West Virginia (c. h. Wood Co.), has oil-refineries, oil-well supply works, flour and lumber mills, and an extensive trade in manufactured goods, farm products, and coal. The tombs of the last dynasty lie about 20 miles north of the city, and those of the present dynasty from 2 to 3 days' journey east and west of Peking. Peking has, except for short intervals, been an imperial residence for more than 900 years, and was an important place long before that date. It probably owes its choice as a capital in large measure to its favorable position from a geomantic point of view. As the country around it is too poor to support its population, supplies have to be imported from the south. This need led to the construction of the Grand Canal, and of a shorter canal across the promontory of Shan-tung. Peking became one of the capitals of the Khitan Tatars at the end of the 10th century; was rebuilt by Kublai Khan; and has been sole capital since the beginning of the 15th century. It surrendered to the Anglo-French force in 1860, and was taken by the allied forces sent in 1900 for the relief of the foreign legations.

Another large palace is the Quirinal, the residence of the King of Italy. Rome contains many picture galleries and museums, filled with priceless art treasures, and several libraries with valuable collections of books and manuscripts. Many of the palaces and villas of the old Roman nobility have also collections of pictures and sculptures. Chief among them are the Borghese Palace, the Colonna, Doria, Farnese, Corsini, and Barberini palaces; and the Villa Borghese, Albani, Ludovisi, Medici, etc. The history of Rome was for centuries the history of the civilized world; and even after it ceased to be the capital of the empire, it was the center of civilization, and the most interesting and influential city of Christen and the most interesting and influential city of Christendom. Rome was the capital of a kingdom which gradually grew till the foundation of the republic in 509 B. C.
The republic steadily extended, and after wars with Æquians, Volscians, Latins, Samnites, Sabines, Tarentines, etc., Rome became mistress of Italy by the middle of the 3rd century B. C. Then came the wars with Carthaginians and Macedonians, with Jugurtha and Mithridates, and Rome made herself the mistress of southern Europe, northern Africa and western Asia.
First Gaul, and then southern Britain were conquered by Julius Cæsar (51 B. C.). The republic was overthrown, and Augustus, the first emperor, was at peace with all the world soon after the birth of Christ. The empire was extended to Germany and Dacia, in Parthia and Asia; but in the 3rd century A. D. the northern and the most interesting and influential city of Christenwith all the world soon after the birth of Christ. The empire was extended to Germany and Dacia, in Parthia and Asia; but in the 3rd century A. D. the northern nations—especially the Goths and kindred tribes—began to do more than hold their own, and the empire contracted on the north. The seat of the empire was removed from Rome to Byzantium, or Constantinople, by Constantine in 330 A. D., and in 364 the empire was divided into an eastern and a western empire, Rome remaining capital of the western half. Ere long Rome was taken and retaken by the barbarians (410,476), and, retaken again (553) by Belisarius, was made dependent on Constantinople. But as capital of the popes, new glories were in store for her; Charlemagne and Otho of Germany were crowned emperors of the West at Rome, and the city became the independent capital of the increasing papal dominions, or States of the Church, the Romagna, Bologna, and Perugia being conquered by Pope Julius II, in 1503. Rome remained the mother city of Christendom, and continued to flourish in spite of the temporary sojourn of the popes at Avignon and the short-lived republic of Rienzi (1347). Again 1808 the city became part of the French kingdom of Italy. It was restored to the popes in 1814, who, save during the troubles of 1848-9, retained it as capital of the States of the Church, under French protection; but in 1860 the papal states revolted to Sardinia, and in 1870 Rome became part of the Italian kingdom and the national capital.

Washington, District of Columbia, is the capital of the United States, lies on the left bank of the Potomac, 156 miles from the Chesapeake Bay, and is, in many respects, one of the most beautiful cities of the United States. The present site of the national capital was selected in 1790, mainly through the agency of George Washington; and the Federal District of Columbia, 100 square miles in area, was set apart for this purpose, on territory ceded by Maryland and Virginia. The Virginia portion of the district was, however, retroceded in 1846, and the present area of the District of Columbia is 69 square miles. The commerce and manufactures of Washington are relatively unimportant, and its prosperity depends on its position as the seat of Columbia is 69 square miles. The commerce and manufactures of Washington and hese, with their families, make up a large proportion of the population. It is emphatically the scientific center of the country and its many scientific societies have thousands of members. The sobriquet of "City of Magnificent Distances," applied to Washington when its framework seemed unnecessarily large for its growth, is still deserved, perhaps, for t orated with paintings by 50 American artists. The library contains upwards of 2,000,000 volumes, over 100,000 manuscripts, and more than 100,000 maps, etc.

CITIES AND TOWNS OF THE UNITED STATES

1910 CENSUS

In this compilation the official population figures, as determined by the Thirteenth (1910) Census of the United States, are given for all cities, villages and boroughs seperately enumerated by the government officials; of the places not seperately enumerated by the Census Bureau, and for which there are no government figures obtainable, recent estimates, supplied by local officials and by other reliable authorities, are given. Several states made enumerations in 1915 and, where obtainable, these new figures are given, notation being made following name of individual state. Capitals of states are printed in capital letters, and places having one hundred or more inhabitants are named. The index references enclosed in parentheses, indicate location of city or village on the accompanying maps.

Some comparatively unimportant places have been omitted from the maps to avoid crowding and consequent indistinctness in the engraving; such omitted towns will be found in the list, and their situation on the map, in each case, may readily be determined by means of the index-reference letters and numbers,
